President Asks More Power For 'New Deal' in Congress; Talk Praised and Criticized

Congressmen Turn Critical Eyes on Vast U.S. Spending

Move Is on to Sift Corporations Operated by Administration.

Big TVA Power Project Is Focus

Activities Believed Out of Congress' Hands; Curb Suggested.

Republican members of Congress, if not some of the Democrats, are displaying rising interest in the number of special Government-controlled corporations being organized by Executive order and carrying wide authority to engage in an almost unlimited variety of transactions.

Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, vice chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, said last night he had written to the Tennessee Valley Authority asking for full details concerning the new Electric Home and Farm Authority. This subsidiary of TVA is to be incoroprated in Delaware within a few days. It will have authority to use up to $10,000,000 of RFC funds to finance householders in the Tennessee River Valley in buying electric refrigerators, waffle irons, washing machines, electric irons and other domestic apparatus.

Interest also is being manifested among returning Senators and Representatives over othe Government sponsored corporations set up since adjournment last spring.

Surplus Relief Set-up Scanned.

One is the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, also a Delaware concern, whose incorporators are Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Harold L. Ickes, who is both Secretary of Interior and Public Works Administrator, and Harry Hopkins, Civil Works Administrator. It is empowered under its articles of incorporation to deal not only in foodstuffs for relief purposes but in all other products and commodities in domestics and foreign commerce, to engage in export and import trade and to buy and sell land and other property.

This corporation will be used by the Administration in buying between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of poor farm land to be turned back to forest or other noncrop uses.

Another Delaware corporation organized by the Government is the Public Works Emergency Housing Corporation. It has received

Fire Destroys Noted Mansion

Bushwood Manor, Outside Leonardtown, Had Been Home of Nuns.

Leonardtown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.). Famous old Bushwood Manor, 18 miles south of here, that once served as council chamber of the Maryland Colonies Treasury, was destroyed by fire today.

The fire was discovered by the five Catholic nuns who occupied the mansion, lately turned into a mission, when they returned from teaching at nearby schools. Defective wiring was believed the cause.

Volunteer firemen from Leonardtown were unable to check the flames. The structure was owned by the Jesuit Order. No estimate of the damage was available.

The mansion, built 275 years ago, has been referred to in George Bancroft's "History of Maryland" as the most beautiful and best preserved of its kind in the United States.

Among the things it boasted were famous stairway carvings, carved by the "debenture servants." Two noted Maryland families, the Schleys and Plowdens, had owned the manor.

Twenty years ago John Rengham bought the place. At his death, ten years later, his widow deeded it to the Jesuit Order.

Repeal Bill Before Kentucky Legislature

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 3 (AP).—Repeal of the State prohibition enforcement act, reduction in the cost of automobile licenses one-third and revision of school laws were among 21 measures introduced in the Kentucky General Assembly today.

In introducing his bill to repeal the enforcement act, Representative Tyler Munford (Democrat), of Morgansfield, said the purpose was to get the law "out of the way" so liquor-control legislation could be passed.

First Liquor Tax Violator Is Fined In Prince Georges

In the first case of its kind tried in Prince Georges County, Lois Goad, Beltsville, Md., was fined $25 and costs yesterday in Hyattsville Police Court for selling liquor without a license.

She also paid $25 and costs for selling whisky on which no tax had been paid. Two more warrants of similar natures, sworn out the day after the first arrest, also brought convictions, but sentence was suspended.

Sankey Linked To Lindbergh Kidnaping Case

Prosecutor Says Fugitive Planned to Abduct Ruth, Dempsey.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 3 (AP).—New evidence which he said led him to believe Verne Sankey, widely sought as an alleged kidnaper, not only might have been implicated in the abduction of the Lindbergh baby, but also contemplated kidnaping two sport idols was disclosed today by County Attorney M. F. Kinkead.

The evidence, the prosecutor said, was discovered in Sankey's ranch home at Gann Valley, S. Dak. Babe Ruth and Jack Dempsey were the sport figures Kinkead believed Sankey sought to capture.

Kinkead found the evidence in his attempts to run down abductors of Haskell Bohn, local manufacturer's son, who was kidnaped and released after payment of $12,000.

Sankey is under indictment here for that crime and also is wanted in Denver for the $60,000 ransom abduction of Charles Boettcher 2d.

Kinkead previously had said a comparison of notes in the Lindbergh, Boettcher and Bohn kidnapings showed all might have been written by the same person.

Dispatches from New York said Babe Ruth listened incredulously to the information he might be an intended kidnap victim.

"Well," he was quoted as saying, "I sure hope they get that guy. I never got any letters from him or anything, but I don't want him coming my way unless I can get my hands on a bat."

Justice Department officials at Washington admitted they wished to question Sankey in the Boettcher case, but refused either to confirm or deny his possible connection with the Lindbergh case.

Mrs. Fern Sankey, wife of the fugitive, acquitted here of connection with the Bohn kidnaping, is held in Denver under indictment in the Boettcher case. Ray Robinson, captured in Canada, now serving a 25-year prison term for the Bohn kidnaping, implicated Sankey, officers said.

Grand Jury to Inquire Into San Jose Lynching

San Jose, Calif., Jan. 3 (AP).—A grand jury probe of the recent lynching here of the two kidnapslayers of Brooke L. Hart was set today for January 11. District Attorney Fred Thomas announced evidence collected by his office will be presented.

Indictments of persons other than Anthony Cataldi was held unlikely by Thomas, who said Cataldi's alleged participation in the lynching would be discussed thoroughly.

4-Day-Old Cabinet Quits in Rumania

Tatarescu Named to Form New Government.

Bucharest, Rumania, Jan. 3 (AP). The government of Constantine Angelescu resigned today after a career of less than five days. Although the administration was described as temporary when King Carol named the former minister of education to succeed the assassinated Premier Ion G. Duca, complications developed sooner than expected.

The resigning minister of commerce, George Tatarescu, was commissioned to form a new cabinet.

In several quarters Tatarescu was expected to pursue a vigorous campaign against the anti-Semitic and Nazi Iron Guard, a member of which killed the former premier December 29. Tomorrow Tatarescu is expected to become the new chief of the Liberal party and to draw up a cabinet list for the king.

Canton, China, Jan. 3 (AP).—Monkey meat—a dish well known among south China epicures—will no longer be served in restaurants under the authority of the Canton government.

An official proclamation, issued today, prohibits the killing of monkeys and the inclusion of monkey meat or monkey brain on the menus. The order said monkeys "possess many of the traits of man, including intelligence. Therefore, they should be protected."

300 Million Rum Tax Bill Given House

Quick Passage Sought to Raise $750,000 Revenue a Day.

A liquor tax bill designed to raise $750,000 a day in new revenues, swelling Treasury receipts about $300,000,000 annually, yesterday was favorably reported by the House Ways and Means Committee, and will be made the first order of business in the House today.

House Democratic leaders assured legislative right-of-way for the bill.

Providing a $2 a gallon liquor tax, a tax of $5 a barrel on beer and a sliding scale ranging from 10 cents to $2 a gallon on wines and champagnes, the measure was identical with the preliminary draft prepared two weeks ago following brief committee hearings.

"Your committee recognizes that the existing laws imposing liquor taxes are voluminous and complicated, and hopes in the near future to report a bill which will simplify and improve these old statutes," Chairman Robert L. Doughton reported.

Promises "Maximum Revenue."

He said rates proposed in the present bill "will return the maximum amount of revenue without incurring the dangers of perpetuating illegal liquor traffic by excessive rates."

The only proposed change in the measure met with short shrift in the House Ways and Means Committee—a recommendation by Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, that Congress triple the import tax on liquors from countries more than 10 per cent in default in debt payments to this Government. The committee voted it down.

Decision to give the bill right of way today was finally reached when it became apparent the local liquor measure could not be reported yesterday.

Serving notice that he will object to all requests from members to speak on extraneous subjects until after the bill is passed, House Democratic Leader Joseph W. Byrns declared "hundreds of thousands of dollars are being lost every day the bill is delayed."

Bills Puts Tax on Perfume.

An effort by Representative Allan T. Goldsborough (Democrat), Maryland, to obtain an hour's time to speak on banking today was blocked by Mr. Byrns.

G. O. P. Independents Pleased, Regulars Dissatisfied.

Absence of Details Brings Complaints

'Best Ever,' Says Norris; 'He Told Us Nothing,' Snell Declares.

(Associated Press.)

Democrats and Republican independents sang a chorus of praise for President Roosevelt's message to Congress yesterday, but the regular Republicans who commented were out of tune.

Senator Norris, Nebraska Republican independent, said it was the "best message I ever heard," but the Republican Senate leader, McNary, of Oregon, called it "the finest repeal of the Constitution I've ever heard."

The Republican House leader, Snell, of New York, criticized Mr. Roosevelt for failing to "tell anything to the people about what he had in mind," but Senator Couzens, Michigan Republican, said, "I am particularly delighted. Always having been a left winger, I'm glad to see the President leaning in that direction."

Robinson Elated.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority leader, said the message would form the basis for future recommendations for specific measures, and said that during his 30 years in Congress he never witnessed such an enthusiastic reception as that given the President.

Snell said:

"He didn't tell anything to the people about what he had in mind as to his future policies or recommendations to Congress.

"The only real thing the people are interested in at the present time is where we are going from here. While the President had the opportunity, he didn't take us into his confidence.

"I noticed the loudest applause came from the Democratic side when he said child labor had been abolished. It had been abolished in the Northern Republican States for a generation. The only place he has abolished it is in his own Democratic-controlled Southern States."

Yes and No, Says Huey.

In the wide sweep of comment, others who discussed the message were:

Senator Long (Louisiana), Democrat:

"It sounds all right, but it's not specific."

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina: "The address will unquestionably command the attention and the commendation of the American people as a whole, because it evidenced in every statement his sincere interest in the masses and fair play and fair dealing in the New Deal."

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina: "It assures the American people that their Govern-

President Addresses Opening Session of Congress

President's Message to Congress

To the Congress:

I come before you at the opening of the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress, not to make requests for special or detailed items of legislation; I come, rather, to counsel with you, who, like myself, have been selected to carry out a mandate of the whole people, in order that without partisanship you and I may cooperate to continue the restoration of our national well-being and, equally important, to build on the ruins of the past a new structure designed better to meet the present problems of modern civilization.

Such a structure includes not only the relation of industry and agriculture and finance to each other, but also the effect which all of these three have on our individual citizens and on the whole people as a Nation.

Now that we are definitely in the process of recovery, lines have been rightly drawn between those to whom the recovery means a return to old methods—and the number of these people is small—and those for whom recovery means a reform of many old methods, a permanent readjustment of many of our ways of Perpetuation of NRA Urged, But Address Lacks Details.

Bankers Targets Of Another Blast

Recovery Is on, He Says, Yet Minority Wants "Old Order" Back.

By Elliott Thurston.

President Roosevelt called upon Congress and the country yesterday to follow him from recovery, which he said was definitely under way, into reformation perpetuating the New Deal.

Addressing in person the reassembled Seventy-third Congress, and by radio the entire Nation, the President saw the issue "rightly drawn" between a minority "to whom this recovery means a return to old methods" and an overwhelming majority "for whom recovery means a reform of many old methods, a permanent readjustment of many of our social and economic arrangements."

Although he lifted the curtain but little on the Administration's specific program for the future, since his message was frankly generalized, he called for a "new structure designed better to meet the present problems of modern civilization."

Stabilization Passed By.

Leaving stabilization for an indefinite future, because "certain of our sister nations * * * feel unable at this time to enter into stabilization discussions based upon permanent world-wide objectives," he declared for "a medium of exchange which will have over the years less variable purchasing and debt paying power for our people than that of the past."

He envisioned the principles of NRA as "a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure" to be perpetuated "under the supervision, but not the arbitrary dictation, of government itself."

He pronounced the experiment in control of agriculture successful so far and declared for restoration of "a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work."

He cited "planned flood control, power development and land use policies" as "furthering the same principle of a better balanced national life."

Recognizes "Great Cost."

Recognizing the "great ultimate cost of the application of this rounded policy to every part of the Union," and the "heavy obliga-

Dictatorship Rule Is Sought By LaGuardia

Mayor Seeks Power to Reduce $25,000,000 Budget Excess.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—The city's new fusion administration, brushing aside opposition, today asked the Legislature to give Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia dictatorial powers to slash municipal expenditures.

Disregarding a reminder that salary cuts would break his campaign pledges, LaGuardia led the fight to push through the board of estimate the resolution to the Legislature.

"I said that if city finances would permit there would be no salary reductions," said the mayor to former Deputy Comptroller Frank J. Prial, who asked action on the resolution be deferred.

Unprecedented Powers.

Prial, a civil service worker who eliminated the Tammany candidate for comptroller at the primary, only to be defeated at the general election, suggested a public hearing at which powers to be conferred on the mayor could be weighed.

The resolution, rushed to the head of the calendar, calls on the Legislature to give the mayor powers almost unprecedented in American municipal government—the right to cut salaries, eliminate departments and transfer bureaus from one department to another.

"It is an unusual bill for an unusual situation," LaGuardia told Prial. "I admit it proposes extraordinary powers but an extraordinary situation must be met—the city's budget must be balanced."

Budget $25,000,000 High.

Before the resolution finally was approved it was amended to end the mayor's proposed extraordinary powers on October 1 instead of extending them over a period of two years. It was pointed out this would give the mayor time to balance the budget—reported yesterday to be $25,000,000 off balance.

Bernard S. Deutsch, fusion president of the board of aldermen, announced the new administration will investigate reports that $300,000 "passed hands" in connection with the granting of bus franchises.

His Conscience Hurt So Navy Receives Dollar

Some one was indebted to the Navy for $1. Yesterday the department received the money wrapped in a piece of paper on which was printed: "Enclosed one dollar, conscience money, Navy Department."

Blast in Mine Traps 132 Men

All Feared Dead; Relief Crew Recovers 12 Bodies.

Duchcov, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 3 (AP).—A mine explosion today trapped 132 miners, 12 of whom were known dead.

The blast shook all houses in this city of 13,000 and it appeared the whole mine had caved in. It was feared every man underground was killed.

Recue workers worked to get into the shaft, but the mass of debris made their efforts apparently hopeless.

Duchcov lies in a rich coal field in the extreme northwestern part of Czechoslovakia.

The cause of the explosion was not immediately learned.

Express Train Hits Truck, One Killed

Engineer Also Feared Dead in Jersey Wreck.

Deans, N. J., Jan. 3 (AP).—The New York-St. Louis express train, Spirit of St. Louis, Pennsylvania Railroad, crashed a fruit truck here late today, killing the driver and hurling the wreckage on to the eastbound tracks, where it partly derailed the locomotive of an Atlantic City train a few seconds later.

Wrecking crews were working to free Arthur Bollinger, engineer of the St. Louis train, who was believed dead. He was pinned between the locomotive and the first car.

The driver of the truck was tentatively identified by papers in his pockets as Joseph Wallad, of Irvington. No passengers were injured.

Long Threatens Senate Fight On Morgenthau

Leaders Aren't Worried as He Says "Record" Must Be Aired.

(Associated Press.)

A threat by Senator Long, of Louisiana, to hold up confirmation of Henry Morgenthau, jr., as Secretary of the Treasury failed yesterday to worry Senate Democratic leaders, who are determined to obtain quick action on President Roosevelt's friend and fiscal adviser.

Morgenthau was asked to appear before the Senate Finance Committee today, even before his nomination is received, in order to dispose of the routine formalities of inquiry.

Long told newspapermen he would go before the committee and ask thorough investigation of "two records" — concerning Morgenthau and turned over to him by constituents, but Administration stalwarts predicted early Senate approval.

Has Taken Oath.

Morgenthau, former governor of the Farm Credit Administration, took the oath as Treasury Secretary on New Year's Day, after the President had accepted the resignation of William H. Woodin.

Informed some one had said he might be prompted in his move of an investigation by reports Morgenthau had opened an inquiry into Long's income tax returns, the Louisiana Senator said:

"I haven't heard anything about that for two years. If there is any such thing as a 'decome' tax, the Treasury will owe me a lot of money. All I have heard is that the Treasury has made some refunds to some of my friends."

Long said he did not now "how accurate" the information was that had been furnished him about Morgenthau, but he was going to insist that it be investigated.

"I am willing to judge him strictly on his record up to this time," he said, referring to Morgenthau's six weeks as Acting Secretary and the two days he has been the Secretary-designate.

"I don't want the Senate to make the same mistake again," he added. "Woodin and Acheson both proved a disaster.

"Wall Street has been watching the Treasury and getting by with it pretty close up to now, and maybe now for all I know. I think we ought to help the President this time to avoid such a connection."

Long said he would protest the nomination being "railroaded through."

4 Powers Plan War, Reds Say

Moscow Blames Germany, England, Japan and U. S. for Peril.

Moscow, Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Warning of the swiftly increasing danger of war in Europe and in the Far East was sounded by the Communist International today.

The government-controlled newspaper, Pravda, published the warning in the form of a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Communist International. The attitude was in line with the "war scare" consciousness apparent in Russia.

"The Japanese military clique," the Pravda stated, "is trying to reach an understanding with German Fascists and British Imperialists for the purpose of provoking a counter-revolutionary war against the Soviet Union in the east and west."

The Communists asserted "British and American imperialistic systems are redoubling their preparations for a decisive collision in the Atlantic and Pacific areas.

French Rail Men Cited in Tragedy

6 Charged With Homicide; 200 Were Killed.

Meaux, France, Jan. 3 (AP).—Charges of homicide through negligence were filed today against six employes of the East Railway at the first magistrate's hearing into the wreck December 23 which killed 200 persons.

Alleged failure to inspect and maintain properly automatic signaling apparatus on the cab of the locomotive of the Strasbourg flier, which crashed into the rear of the Nancy express at Lagny, was the basis of the charges.

The defendants are four technical executives and two members of the crew.

'Gloomy Dean' Pictures Britain Deserted by U. S. in Future War

London, Jan. 3 (AP).—Dean Inge, who will retire this year as head of St. Paul's Cathedral, declares in the new edition of his book, "England," that "the American Government seriously contemplated taking action against us in the early part of the war."

Living up to his popular appellation, "The Gloomy Dean," he says further: "If in the future we are attacked by a European coalition, we may take it as probable the United States will leave us to our fate unless, indeed, we are invaded by a black army."

The volume is to be published tomorrow.

When the United States joined the allies, he says, "whatever sentiment was allowed to enter into their calculations was in favor of France, not England."

The position of Great Britain as one of the great powers is bound to decline relatively, though not absolutely, he predicts.

"The future, as regards effective force and wealth, belongs to large countries not yet full of people," he adds.

Asserting the Dominions may not always be willing to support England, the dean observes further: "It seems to me to be almost certain we shall be unable to find food and work for our present population."

Duce Proposes Arms Balance Instead of Cuts

Italian Premier Suggests New Approach in Talk With Briton.

Rome, Jan. 3 (AP).—A revision of arms figures calculated for a satisfactory balance among national armaments, rather than a wholesale slash previously favored by Italy, was said authoritatively today to have been suggested by Premier Mussolini to Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary.

The two statesmen conferred this afternoon, seeking a solution to the Franco-German deadlock on disarmament. They also exchanged ideas regarding the Italian premier's demand for League of Nations reforms.

An official communique tonight said they had a "cordial colloquy" and will meet again tomorrow.

Well-informed circles believed Il Duce practically has abandoned hope of winning France over to an immediate radical cut in arms.

Revision of armament distribution, according to the Italian idea, would take the shape of German rearmament, and hence the question, instead of being one of disarmament, would become one of rearming.

Sir John, who previously discussed the matter in Paris and London, declined to discuss his conference.

Regarding suggested reform of the league, it was considered certain the Italian premier insisted the Genva institution should be divorced from the Versailles Treaty, which, he maintains, was drafted in a spirit of vengeance.

Mussolini also was believed to have suggested depriving the league of its power to invoke military sanctions, and the setting up of a higher hierarchy of the big powers within it along the lines of the Four-Power European peace pact signed last summer by Germany, Italy, Great Britain and France.

Mrs. Webster Takes Stand

Washington Woman Tells of Ritter's Pact to Pay $70,000 Yearly.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Mrs. Gertrude Devine Webster, of Washington, took the witness stand today in an attempt to compel her former husband, a millionaire lumber man, to pay her $70,000 annually under a separation agreement which she said was drawn up before they were divorced in 1922.

The former husband, William M. Ritter, 67, a friend of Presidents Coolidge and Hoover, is fighting the suit on the ground that the agreement is illegal under the laws of West Virginia, which he claims as his home State.

Mrs. Webster, who is 63, traced the source of her break with Ritter back to 1921. In the summer of that year, she said, she got the idea of taking some sick babies from Washington to her estate at Manchester, Vt., so they could escape the heat.

She said her husband objected to the cost of the project, but she carried it out with funds provided for her clothing.

"Mr. Ritter was ugly about it because I was praised so highly for my solicitude for the babies," she said.

She said that under the separation agreement, drawn in Philadelphia in 1922, she received homes in Washington and Manchester, Vt., as well as $500,000 in cash during the next five years. The agreement called for $70,000 yearly in addition, she said, but these payments stopped in 1932.

After her divorce, the former Mrs. Ritter became the wife of Hugh Webster.

Havana, Jan. 3 (AP).—Col. Gulgencio Batista, commander of Cuba's armed forces, sent reinforcements into Oriente Province today, but army officials were silent on the purpose of hte expedition. One hundred and twenty-five soldiers entrained at Havana this morning.

Whether the movement was an outcome of Batista's recent trip to Oriente Province was not revealed. The officer in charge of army headquarters said he knew "nothing about the troop movement."

Jefferson Caffery, President Roosevelt's personal representative in Cuba, was honor guest at a luncheon tendered today by the American Club. Other guests were officers of the American warships in Cuban waters, staffs of the embassy and consulate.

Disastrous Storm Floods City in California

Toll of Storm In California May Reach 50

31 Bodies Recovered as Workers Comb Huge Piles of Debris.

Los Angeles, Jan. 3 (AP).—Scenes of tragedy were enacted today as more bodies were sought amid the muddy desolation left near here by the disastrous flood which took possibly 50 or more lives.

Unnerved by the long suspense, parents searched for missing children. Friends and relatives besieged relief workers for news of the more than 60 still unaccounted for.

Thirty-one bodies have been recovered.

Hampered by mud bogs and debris, more than 5,000 relief and reconstruction workers labored to restore some semblance of order and comfort in the Montrose, North Glendale and La Crescenta area.

Many of those still reported missing may be in hospitals and first aid stations.

Making an inspection tour of the area, some 18 miles northeast of here, Gov. James Rolph, jr., left his automobile to watch CWA workmen digging in debris. From an excavation a bit of child's clothing appeared. Soon a tiny limb was visible. Tears came to the governor's eyes as he turned away.

Dozens of residents in the north section of Glendale still were homeless. Fifteen hundred CWA workers were assigned to this area.

About 75 automobiles were believed covered by mud and rocks from Montrose to Le Crescenta. Searchers thought bodies might be found in some of them.

CWA workers scoured the Los Angeles River bottoms north and east of here for bodies and buried automobiles, despite deep mud banks and quicksands.

Reno to Urge Barter Agency

Farm Strike Leader Says Plan Would Give Jobs.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—A barter agency to handle an exchange of the products of farmers and industrial labor was suggested as a feasible and economically sound means of relief today by Milo Reno, president of the Farmers Holiday Association.

The farm strike leader said he would offer the idea to Mayor LaGuardia, but "would like to see the plan adopted on a national scale by the Federal Government."

Reno came to New York to address a mass meeting tomorrow night of the Farmer Labor Political Federation, but asserted that as far as he and the holiday association were concerned "we will await developments of the Roosevelt Administration's program before we formulate a third-party movement of farmers and laborers."

Discussing the relief plan—which he said was not alone his idea, nor did he sponsor it, but which "grew out of the relief needs of the West"—Reno set forth:

"It would put industry's unemployed back to work making things the farmer needs: clothing, shoes, machinery. In turn the farmer would find a market for his products sufficient at least to meet production cost.

Widow Wills Funds For Hoff Memorial

Army Medical Director to Be Paid Honor.

The memory of Col. John Van Rensselaer Hoff, well-known for his work in Army medical circles, will be perpetuated through a $10,000 memorial at Walter Reed Hospital, it was learned yesterday when the will of his widow was filed in District Supreme Court.

Mrs. Lavina Day Hoff, his widow, who died last month, directed that $10,000 from her estate be used to build a memorial to afford "the greatest benefit to humanity."

Col. Hoff died 19 years ago. He was a former commandant of the Army Medical School and of Walter Reed Hospital.

Mrs. Hoff requested, also, that her household effects and jewelry be given to a niece, Alice L. Day.

tions," he spoke of "the time in the not distant future" when the national budget would be brought into balance while the "work" proceeded under "a national plan."

"Such a national plan," he said, "will, in a generation or two, return many times the money spent on it; more important, it will eliminate the use of inefficient tools, conserve and increase natural resources, prevent waste, and enable millions of our people to take better advantage of the opportunities which God has given our country."

Comparing the unethical, if not lawless, banker to the bandit, he declared that the New Deal would move to measures of reform because, he said, the unethical, illegal acts of banker and bandit require "the strong arm of the Government for their immediate suppression."

"It is an integrated program," he added, "national in scope. Viewed in the large, it is designed to save from destruction and to keep for the future the genuinely important values created by modern society."

New Controls Implied.

"Unnecessary expansion of industrial plants, the waste of natural resources, the exploitation of the consumers by natural monopolies, the accumulation of stagnant surpluses, child labor and the ruthless exploitation of all labor, the encouragement of speculation with other people's money"—ll these he declared must go, implying new Government controls to achieve the purpose.

Generalized as these declarations are—specific proposals are to come in separate messages or legislation suggested directly ot committees of Congress—they reveal Mr. Roosevelt determined not only to perpetuate but to extend the New Deal.

The issue, as he stated it, is the more sharply defined, since his message shows him ready to challenge a return "to old methods," resolved to establish lasting governmental controls over industry and agriculture, currency and credit, new investment, banking and exchanges.

Experiments Go On.

That he is not taking the road to stabilization, to an early balance of the budget, to any of the goals of yesterday's orthodoxy, but is bent upon continued monetary experiment, upon arriving at a form of managed currency as yet undefined, is evident from the message.

With a political acumen, quickly noted by the old hands at the game, he adroitly came before Congress "not to make requests for special or detailed items of legislation" but to counsel with you," to ask for continued cooperation "without partisanship."

Like a Family Reunion.

The reassembling of the seventy-third Congress for its first regular session and the first meeting of any Congress under the new dispensation of the Norris "lame duck" amendment was merely a prelude, setting the stage for Mr. Roosevelt's entrance in the stellar role.

As Senate and House clocks pointed to noon, Vice President Garner and Speaker Rainey rapped their gavels to silence the babel and end the nonpartisan hand-shaking and back-slapping which, in this heavily Democratic Congress, was suggestive of a happy family reunion.

Galleries of both Houses and all adjacent corridors were jammed, the crowds concentrating on the House side to see the President and, for those who held tickets for the limited number of seats or standing places inside the House chamber, to hear him.

Both Senate and House went through the usual preliminaries. Both swore in new members—the Senate group of four being Senators Hatch, of New Mexico, replacing Senator Bratton, who resigned to go on the Federal bench; Gibson, of Vermont, replacing the late Senator Dale; O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, succeeding the late Senator Kendrick, and Byrd, of Virginia, who was appointed last March to the vacancy left by Senator Swanson's shift to be Secretary of the Navy and was duly elected this fall.

Farley on Hand.

The Senate chaplain's prayer caught Postmaster General Farley on the Republican side of the chamber, where he stood, head bowed, while Divine guidance was invoked. The customary committee was named by the chair to tell the President that the Senate was again on deck and ready for his mesage—the pretense, inherited from early days of slow communication, being that modern Presidents might not be aware of the return of the legislators.

Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, collaborated with Mr. Roosevelt in dispensing with most of this formality, however, for the Arkansas Senator, instead of going there with the notifying committee in their tall hats and tail coats, 'phoned the White House, jestingly told the President to get ready for a "shock and a surprise," namely, that Congress was in session, and Mr. Roosevelt replied that he would be upon Capitol Hill "in a few minutes."

The House, by similar formalities, put itself in readiness for the event of the day—the President's Message. A ramp had been installed from one House door behind the Speaker's dais to the table in front of the Speaker's chair. Overhead were bright spotlights, and ranged around were the microphones to carry his words over the major air channels to all ends of the country.

Lunch Before Speech.

Both Senate and House, after their routine reassembling was over, recessed to await the appointed hour of 1:30 o'clock for the President's appearance, the hour being moved somewhat ahead, permitting him and hungry legislators to lunch first. It was 1:33 p. m., by the House clock, when Mr. Roosevelt, amid a tumult of applause and cheers from floor and packed galleries, moved up the ramp, his tall son, James, at his side, and the escort of legislative leaders as a vanguard.

Members of the Cabinet had filed down the center aisle just ahead and had been seated in a semicircle forming the front row, Acting Secretary of State Phillips, substituting for the absent Secretary Hull; Acting Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, in place of the ill Secretary Swanson; Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, making his first public appearance in his new post, and Secretary of Labor Perkins, in her celebrated tricolor hat.

Mr. Roosevelt beamed his magnetic smile. It turned upon the Vice President and the Speaker, behind him; it radiated over the sea of legislative faces before him, and was lifted to the eager galleries. The fervor incressased perceptibly. Assistant White House Secretary Early shoved the manuscript of the Presidential address onto the upraised desk. Mr. Roosevelt, his hand steady—most President's betray nervousness before the assembled Congress, but not Mr. Roosevelt—put down the case containing his glasses, which he slowly adjusted to his nose.

"I have the distinguished honor of presenting to you the President of the United States," said Speaker Rainey in a tone of awed solemnity.

Another salvo of applause rippled over the audience. Mr. Roosevelt began reading in an easy, modulated voice, tempered to the microphones, which long have been familiar to him. He was in his best form, his words clearly articulated. He was addressing himself as much to the country as to Congress.

Applause broke out frequently, but not fervently enough to interrupt for long the smooth flow of his speech going out on the air waves; nor did he pause for or invite applause, his voice moving on to cut it off at several points when incipient hand-clapping ventured forth.

Mrs. Roosevelt's arrival in the gallery was a signal for a share in the welcoming ovation, although she seemed unaware that she was meant to be the recipient. The ever ruddy Vice President, with his bushy white eyebrows, likewise was greeted with spontaneous warmth as he entered the arena over which he once was ringmaster. So, too, his successor, Speaker Rainey, conspicuous in any crowd by reason of his heavy mane of white hair, was given his meed of tribute from the legislators.

House Is Hushed.

Noisy as the House was in its first throes of assembling, it fell into hushed silence as Mr. Roosevelt began the reading of the message. Gripping a side of the rostrum desk with his left hand, Mr. Roosevelt kept a right index finger on his manuscript from which he repeatedly looked up to flash his pervading smile upon the multitude before and above him. Thus he made numerous minor changes in the text of his speech, putting in occasional words to stress his emphasis.

The applause was nonpartisan, members of both major parties participating, the only notable exception being the exceedingly morose looking Huey Long, who scowled throughout. If he made any sign of approval, it was not visible from the press gallery.

The first approving burst from the audience came upon the words emphasizing that human welfare must be bettered, not by "materialism and luxury" but by "integrity, unselfishness, responsibility and justice." Another wave greeted his appeal to take "comon counsel," with a Congress which he lavishly commended for "fine understanding" last spring when, he said, the problems faced were as great as those with which the first Congress grappled upon the birth of the Republic.

There was a flurry when he mentioned the gold and silver buying; more applause when he spoke of 600 millions of dollars being restored to bank depositors. His stress upon the abolition of child labor brought another quick response, but there was silence after his mention of the NRA.

When he likened industrial rivalries in monopoly to "gang wars of the underworld," he was applauded again, as he was when he said that the new ordering of industry while permanent will be under the "supervision" but not under "arbitrary dictation" of the Government.

Farm Bloc Gladdened.

The farm bloc vigorously clapped when he restated his aim of a "proper balance" for agriculture in the economics order. There was more approval of his reiterated doctrine of non-interference "by one nation in the internal affairs of another." His plea for arms reduction and lowering of "barriers against commerce" produced another round, more vigorous than most of the responses.

There was not only loud applause but much laughter when he appreciatively mentioned that Finland, alone of all the war debtors, had paid its installments in full. And as he hit out hard at the bankers, much as he did in his inaugural attack on the "money-changers," the audience responded with manifest approval. He linked the unethical, speculative, tax-evading banker with the bandit.

His excoriation of these elements, unethical and lawless, was applauded far more than his immediately following reference to repeal as an eliminator of crime. Earlier, the House clerk's routine reading of the formal list of ratifying States evoked no notice, until the name of Utah was uttered. A few House members seemed to feel that Utah deserved a hand-clap for being the thirty-sixth State to put over repeal.

Departs Amid Applause.

A sporadic ripple greeted Mr. Roosevelt's plea to "reconstruct our life" so that old "weeds" of exploitation, child labor, speculation, &c., should not grow again, and his concluding phrase, renewing appeal for a union of executive and legislative action under the "impulse of common purpose," unloosed again the sustained applause and intermingled cheers, which kept up until he had walked down the ramp, after shaking hands with Garner and Rainey, and vanished through the doorway. The speech took 21 minutes, according to the timekeepers, and ended on the stroke of 2 o'clock.

So cordial was Congress that deductions of continuing docility were heard about the corridors, but these were hardly reliable in the first flush of Mr. Roosevelt's undoubted gift for casting a magnetic spell upon audiences.

Mr. Roosevelt's decision to go before Congress, instead of having his message read by Senate and House clerks, was more than a perpetuation of the custom revived by Woodrow Wilson, but seldom followed since; it was considered by political leaders typical of Mr. Roosevelt's sense of public psychology. It afforded him the opportunity to report to the country, as much as to Cnogress, to make his words count with the emphasis he chose to put on them and, above all, to spread good feeling between the Executive and a hitherto yielding but ever potentially rebellious legislative branch.

Mr. Roosevelt aspires to a new harmony and concert of action, as he said in his address. It was a good beginning to read his own message and build up the direct contact, aided as it is by his exceptional power for radiating cheerful, pleasant, conciliatory good fellowship.

German Clerics Rally Against Bishop Today

Hope to End Interchurch Row and Destroy Mueller's Power.

Berlin, Jan. 3 (AP).—Determined to end an Evangelical church interregnum which has existed since November 29, Protestant bishops opposed to Reichsbishop-designate Ludwig Mueller and Nazi German Christians agreed to meet in Berlin tomorrow for a decisive blow against Mueller.

His church cabinet resigned November 29, but since a vain attempt December 2 to appoint successors, all efforts to get him to act in the matter have failed.

The only holdover in the cabinet, Dr. Heinrich Weber, today announced his resignation.

The last ultimatum given Dr. Mueller by the Pastors' Emergency Federation on November 30, when they demanded action looking toward more moderate policies than those of the German Christians, expired last midnight.

The bishops held thta since the Reichsbishop-designate will not act, it is up to the state bishops collectivels to nominate a new cabinet, and to obtain the government's approval.

Of all the state bishops only three—those of Saxony, Brunswick and Schleswig-Holstein—still are identified with the Nazi German Christians, and the opposition bishops have an overwhelming majority in their fight against anti-Semitism, scriptural changes and the mixing of politics and religion.

The Pastors Emergency Federation, comprising more than 6,000 clergymen, also supporting the bishops, now claims likewise to have a clear majority at present.

State bishops hoped to persuade the government that their nominations will establish peace in the Protestant church.

Congressmen Eye Vast U. S. Spending Units

Republicans Seek to Sift Huge Corporations, Especially TVA.

$200,000,000 from PWA to build low-cost houses.

This company's charter provides it can do anything a private contractor or builder might do and may engage in general construction, perform architectural and engineering work; equip, furnish, manage, operate and maintain homes and buildings of all descriptions; lay out, construct and maintain public highways, parks, sewers, bridges, recreational facilities, utilities and incidental improvements in connection with any housing or building project.

Still Another Probed.

Still another Delaware corporation formed last month is the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation. It began operations with a $25,000,000 fund under the public works section of the National recovery act which provided for development of subsistence homesteads. This use of PWA funds was specifically authorized in the act.

In defense of its action in setting up these corporations the Administration points first to the provisions of the National recovery act, which authorizes the President to establish such agencies as he may find necessary to carry out recovery policies. Secondly, it is argued that the corporation set-up gives greater flexibility and scope in operations than would be possible through a Government bureau. Such a corporation may engage in many activities which the Government as such could not do without specific authority of Congress.

On the other side it is insisted that these corporations, having once obtained advances from the public treasury for operating capital, are thereafter free from control by Congress. Accounts, payrolls, operations and policies may be screened as completely as those of any private corporation if it is so desired. There also is fear among some that the wide powers might be used much more fuly than Congress would be willing to approve, although the Administration insists that good judgment will restrain these agencies from doing all of the things technically possible under their charters.

Huge Sales Drive Set.

David E. Lilienthal, a director of TVA, has just concluded negotiations with private electrical appliance manufacturers for manufacture of large quantities of low-priced apparatus for home use. He estimates that in the seven States of the Tennessee Valley, there are 550,000 customers already connected to power wires. With this as a nest egg, it is proposed to extend electricity into thousands of homes by offering inexpensive equipment which can be paid for on installment plans financed with the aid of RFC.

TVA estimates, as outlined to the electrical manufacturers, are that in the coming year 100,000 electrical refrigerators could be sold in the Tennessee Valley, 60,000 electric ranges, and 25,000 water heaters. Potential business amounting to $10,000,000 is anticipated.

Sales will be made by private companies. They will take notes of household purchasers and discount them through the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which will, in turn, offer this paper to local banks with the guarantee of the RFC behind it.

Dr. Lilienthal believes both the high rates of electricity and the high cost of appliances have held back the electric industry. His object in this experiment is to increase consumption of current by putting less expensive appliances in a large number of homes and, as a result of the increased volume of power sales, bring down electric rates and break a vicious circle.

G. O. P. Keeps Close Watch.

In certain Republican quarters a good deal of scrutiny has been given to this method of executive action. Whether it will materialize into any serious complaint or not is uncertain.

"If these corporations are formed under implied authority which Congress has granted, there probably is nothing we can do about it," Senator Dickinson said, in discussing his formal request of the Administration for fuller details. "But in any case the public ought to be fully advised as to what is happening and I think it will be."

Senator Dickinson is to deliver a criticism of the new deal before the Republican clubs of Cuyahoga County, Ohio, at Cleveland Saturday. Whether he will touch upon this particular phase of the Roosevelt recovery machinery is not known.

Curb Is Suggested.

In some Republican quarters the suggestion has been made that the President's right to allocate public funds to these corporations should be challenged by attempts to attach provisos to all appropriation bills that no funds should be used by any agency not specifically authorized to do so by Congress. Another suggestion is for a proviso that no corporation organized under State laws be permitted use of any Congressional funds without first obtaining specific authority.

One memorandum, prepared after study of some of these corporations, said:

"The implications of these corporations are too ominous to be disregarded. It is questionable whether or not Congress will have the authority to demand an accounting of money either expended or taken in by these corporations organized under a State law, except it is done by Congressional investigation, such as is exercised in muckraking any industry or business.

"Certainly, the officers of these corporations are not going to report to Congress how they conduct the affairs of the corporations. Mr. Ickes, for example, has to account to Congress for his conduct as Secretary of the Interior, but he certainly will not have to account to Congress for his conduct as a director of the Surplus Relief Corporation or the Federal Emergency Housing Corporation."

300 Million Liquor Tax Bill Given to House

Opposition to "Too High" and "Too Low" Levies Awaited Today.

expected from the new liquor measure does not include levies already being collected from the $5 a barrel tax on beer, estimated at $160,000,000 annually, or the expected $10,000,000 annual return on wine.

Other features of the bill reported yesterday are:

A 90-cent floor tax is imposed on liquors now in stock, representing the difference between the existing $1.10 tax and the proposed $2 a gallon levy.

A $2 a gallon tax is provided on perfumes containing distilled spirits.

Subsidizes U. S. Exporters.

It permits a "drawback" of up to $2 a galon on liquors exported from this country, to enable American exporters to compete in foreign markets.

Continues the existing "low" occupational levies on liquors, leaving this field of taxation largely to the States.

Repeals $5 a barrel tax on cider and other fruit juices imposed March 22, 1933, under the 3.2 per cent beer act.

Provides the following sliding scale of taxes on wines: containing up to 14 per cent alcohol, 10 cents a gallon; 14 to 21 per cent alcohol, 20 cents a gallon; 21 to 24 per cent alcohol, 40 cents a gallon; over 24 per cent alcohol, $2 a gallon; sparkling wines and champagnes, 40 cents a gallon; artificially carbonated wines, 20 cents a gallon; liquors and cordials, 20 cents a gallon.

Opposition Expected Today.

In quantities of a half-pint or less, a 5-cent tax would be levied on champagne and sparkling wines; a 2½-cent tax on artificially carbontaed wines and 2½ cents on liquors, cordials or similar compounds.

Some opposition to the measure is expected on the floor today from members who think the $2 tax on liquor too high, and others who do not think it is high enough. Representative John J. O'Connor (Democrat), New York, will ask that the tax be increased to $5 a gallon, to take the profit away from alleged "liquor trusts."

"Light" Brains Fail to Worry House Leaders

Refuse to See Anything Alarming in Senators' Extra Weight.

(Associated Press.)

The findings of Dr. Arthur MacDonald, of Washington, that the brains of a group of Senators aggregated more in weight than those of a number of Representatives, apparently is not weighing heavily on the House members.

Here is what Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, the Democratic leader, had to say about the widely published report presented by Dr. MacDonald to the American Association for the Advancement of Science:

"I've always understood that good things are supposed to come in small packages. Besides, the size of a man's brain, I've always been taught, dosen't indicate the use he makes of it."

Would Measure Professors.

Speaker Rainey, who wears a 7¾ hat, ventured it would be interesting "to have that professor's brain measured to see how it compares with the weight of the Representatives' brains."

"Oh, there is nothing amazing about that," said Chairman Steagall (Democrat), Alabama, of the Banking and Currency Committee. "The best brains of the Senate received training in the House first."

"We are very pleased to know it," Chairman Sumners (Democrat) Texas, of the Judiciary Committee, said, "but it is time for them (the Senators) to call up their reserves."

No Need to Be Disturbed.

Representative Wilcox (Democrat), Florida, suggested the Representatives "needn't be disturbed by the findings of the scienist, because, based on the sizes of the two Houses, the Representatives don't need but one-fourth or one-fifth as many brains and still do as much work."

Representative Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, surmised that the investigation of Congressional brain power evidently had been reading some "weighty" arguments made by members of the Senate.

Comment from Senate members was not forthcoming. One Senator asked, "What is there for us to add?"

ment is no longer sitting idly by, letting nature take its course, but is actually working to solve our economic problems, and succeeding in the effort."

Senator Connelly (Democrat) Texas: "A splendid report of progress under his program and a fine statement of policy for the future."

Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts: "A very effective speech that will be well received throughout the country."

Representative Focht (Republican), Pennsylvania: "There was nothing new in the President's speech and it contained his declaration of intention to try something else in the event certain main phases of the Administration program failed to accomplish the desired effect."

Fess Disputes Optimism.

Senator Fess, assistant Republican leader: "It was an optimistic report in which the President gave the country assurance. I regret that conditions in the sections with which I am acquainted do not justify that sort of report."

Senator Norris: "I have been here 3 years. You don't have to agree with all the concrete things the President is trying to do to agree with me it was the best message I ever heard. He is putting honesty in the statute books and giving the Constitution a conscience."

Senator Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky: "A calm, tempered and dignified recital of the accomplishments of the last few months and the fervent hopes he feels for the future."

Representative Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts: "The message itself was distinctively one of omission. I regret that it did not give any direct advice to Congress or suggestions as to the President's future policies, the only reference of this kind being to his expected message regarding foreign debts."

Representative Kvale (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota: "A truly inspiring document."

Representative Beedy (Republican), Maine: "It was notable for its generalizations."

Representative Ayres (Democrat), Kansas: "He gave a good accounting."

Declares U. S. Lags.

Representative Luce (Republican), Massachusetts: "Lack of confidence throughout the world has been the cause of the depression. In other countries, buying and therefore production has started up again. That has been delayed here by artificial attempts to stimulate it."

Representative Wadsworth (Republican), New York: "It was a very clear announcement that the emergency program enacted at the special session of Congress is to be the permanent policy of the United States. That's a question that should give pause to the liberty-loving people of America."

Chairman Rayburn of the House Interstate Commerce Committee: "A great message."

Chairman Rankin of the House Veterans Committee: "The most inspiring message I have ever heard come from a President to the Congress."

Representative Byrns of Tennessee, the Democratic leader: "It was very fine, brief but comprehensive, plain, frank and understandable."

Chairman Mead of the House Democratic caucus: "A fine general review."

Representative McDuffie (Democrat), Alabama: "It was a convincing speech, showing genuine sincerity."

Thugs Torture Two, Loot Bank

One Burned With Matches, Then Slugged; Gang Gets $1,000.

Winnebago, Minn., Jan. 3 (AP).—Four machine gun robbers raided the Blue Earth Valley National Bank, slugged two persons, one of whom was tortured with matches, kidnaped another and escaped with $1,000.

The robbers threatened to "bump off" the cashier and the assistant cashier who were unable to open the safe.

The gunmen broke into the bank during the night. Edward Arndt, cashier, was burned on one ear with matches and then slugged when he told the bandits "it is impossible for me to open the safe."

Ora Herrick, janitor, also was clubbed into insensibility.

Ira Babcock, assistant cashier, was forced to stand on hte running board of the gunmen's automobile as they fled. He was later released.

Builders Foresee Construction Rise

Contractors to Meet Here January 29-31.

Contractors or looking forward to the first rise of construction work this spring since 1929, Edward J. Harding, managing director of the Associated General Contractors of America, said yesterday.

In announcing the contractors' fifteenth annual convention will be held in Washington January 29, 30 and 31, Mr. Harding said allotments under the Public Works Administration are reaching the contract stage "in increasingly heavy volume."

"Every effort to sustain this activity through revival of private construction, and probably additional Federal grants for State and municipal public works, will be made by contractors," he added.

Child Repudiates Death Confession

Tells Judge "a Man" Killed Her Playmate.

White Plains, N. Y., Jan. 3 (AP).—Mary Kavala, 12-year-old Hastings girl, said today that a man killed her 8-year-old playmate, Josephine Waropay, who was found dead Christmas Eve.

She repudiated a confession which District Attorney Frank H. Coyne said she made last week. In the alleged confession, Mary stated she killed the child, "because she knew too much and talked too much."

The new disclosures were made to Judge George Smyth, of the Children's Court.

President Asks Congress Extend New Deal

thinking and, therefore, of many of our social and economic arrangements.

Civilization can not go back; civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our task to perfect, to improve, to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward. To consolidate what we are doing, to make our economic and social structure capable of dealing with modern life, is the joint task of the legislative, the judicial and the executive branches of the National Government.

Congress Praised For Work Already Done.

Without regard to party, the overwhelming majority of our people seek a greater opportunity for humanity to prosper and find happiness. They recognize that human welfare has not increased and does not increase through mere materialism and luxury, but that it does progress through integrity, unselfishness, responsibility and justice.

In the past few months, as a result of our action, we have demanded of many citizens that they surrender certain licenses to do as they pleased in their business relationships; but we have asked this in exchange for the protection which the state can give against exploitation by their fellow men or by combinations of their fellow men.

I congratulate this Congress upon the courage, the earnestness and the efficiency with which you met the crisis at the special session. It was your fine understanding of the National problem that furnished the example which the country has so splendidly followed. I venture to say that the task confronting the First Congress of 1789 was no greater than your own.

I shall not attempt to set forth either the many phases of the crisis which we experienced last March, nor the many measures which you and I undertook during the special session that we might initiate recovery and reform.

It is sufficient that I should speak in broad terms of the results of our common counsel.

Banking, Gold Buying Stabilization Outlook.

The credit of the Government has been fortified by drastic reduction in the cost of its permanent agencies through the economy act.

With the twofold purpose of strengthening the whole financial structure and of arriving eventually at a medium of exchange which will have over the years less variable purchasing and debt-paying power for our people than that of the past, I have used the authority granted me to purchase all American produced gold and silver and to buy additional gold in the world markets. Careful investigation and constant study prove that in the matter of foreign exchange rates, certain of our sister nations find themselves so handicapped by internal and other conditions that they feel unable at this time to enter into stabilization discussions based on permanent and world-wide objectives.

The overwhelming majority of the banks, both National and State, which reopened last spring, are in sound condition and have been brought within the protection of Federal insurance. In the case of those banks which were not permitted to reopen, nearly $600,000,000 of frozen deposits are being restored to the depositors through the assistance of the National Government.

We have made great strides toward the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, for not only have several millions of our unemployed been restored to work, but industry is organizing itself with a greater understanding that reasonable profits can be earned while at the same time protection can be assured to guarantee to labor adequate pay and proper conditions of work. Child labor is abolished. Uniform standards of hours and wages apply today to 95 per cent of industrial employment within the field of the National Industrial Recovery Act. We seek the definite end of preventing combinations in furtherance of monopoly and in restraint of trade, while at the same time we seek to prevent ruinous rivalries within industrial groups which in many cases resemble the gang wars of the underworld and in which the real victim in every case is the public itself.

NRA Effect Permanent, Without Dictation.

Under the authority of this Congress, we have brought the component parts of each industry together around a common table, just as we have brought problems affecting labor to a common meeting ground. Though the machinery, hurriedly devised, may need readjustment from time to time, nevertheless I think you will agree with me that we have created a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure and that it will continue under the supervision but not the arbitrary dictation of Government itself.

You recognized last spring that the most serious part of the debt burden affected those who stood in danger of losing their farms and their homes. I am glad to tell you that refinancing in both of these cases is proceeding with good success and in all probability within the financial limits set by the Congress.

But agriculture had suffered from more than its debts. Actual experience with the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act leads me my belief that thus far the experiment of seeking a balance between production and consumption is succeeding and has made progress entirely in line with reasonable expectations toward the restoration of farm prices to parity. I continue in my conviction that industrial progress and prosperity can only be attained by bringing the purchasing power of that portion of our population which in one form or another is dependent upon agriculture up to a level which will restore a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work.

National Plan Emerging In Job Enterprises.

In this field, through carefully planned flood control, power development and land use policies, in the Tennessee Valley and in other great watersheds, we are seeking the elimination of waste, the removal of poor lands from agriculture and the encouragement of small local industries, thus furthering this principle of a better balanced National life. We recognize the great ultimate cost of the application of this rounded policy to every part of the Union. Today we are creating heavy obligations to start the work and because of the great unemployment needs of the moment. I look forward, however, to the time in the not distant future when annual appropriations, wholly covered by current revenue, will enable the work to proceed with a National plan. Such a National plan will, in a generation or two, return many times the money spent on it; more important, it will eliminate the use of inefficient tools, conserve and increase natural resources, prevent waste and enable millions of our people to take better advantage of the opportunities which God has given our country.

I can not, unfortunately, present to you a picture of complete optimism regarding world affairs.

The delegation representing the United States has worked in close cooperation with the other American republics assembled at Montevideo to make that conference an outstanding success. We have, I hope, made it clear to our neighbors that we seek with them future avoidance of territorial expansion and of interference by one nation in the internal affairs of another. Furthermore, all of us are seeking the restoration of commerce in ways which will preclude the building up of large favorable trade balances by any one nation at the expense of trade debits on the part of other nations.

In other parts of the world, however, fear of immediate or future aggression and with this the spending of vast sums on armament, and the continued building up of defensive trade barriers, prevent any great progress in peace or trade agreements. I have made it clear that the United States can not take part in political arrangements in Europe, but that we stand ready to cooperate at any time in practicable measures on a world basis looking to immediate reduction of armaments and the lowering of the barriers against commerce.

Proposes Action to Curb Crime in Nation.

I expect to report to you later in regard to debts owed the Government and people of this country by the governments and peoples of other countries. Several nations, acknowledging the debt, have paid in small part; other nations have failed to pay. One nation—Finland—has paid the installments due this country in full.

Returning to home problems, we have been shocked by many notorious examples of injuries done our citizens by persons or groups who have been living off their neighbors by the use of methods either unethical or criminal.

In the first category—a field which does not involve violations of the letter of our laws—practices have been brought to light which have shocked those who believed that we were in the past generation raising the ethical standards of business. They call for stringent preventive or regulatory measures. I am speaking of those individuals who have evaded the spirit and purpose of our tax laws, of those high officials of banks or corporations who have grown rich at the expense of their stockholders or the public, of those reckless speculators with their own or other people's money whose operations have injured the values of the farmers' crops and the savings of the poor.

In the other category, crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security.

These violations of ethics and these violations of law call on the strong arm of Government for their immediate suppression; they call, also, on the country for an aroused public opinion.

The adoption of the twenty-first amendment should give material aid to the elimination of those new forms of crime which came from illegal traffic in liquor.

Fight on Unemployment Continues Unabated.

I shall continue to regard it as my duty to use whatever means may be necessary to supplement State, local and private agencies for the relief of suffering caused by unemployment. With respect to this question, I have recognized the dangers inherent in the direct giving of relief and have sought the means to provide not mere relief, but the opportunity for useful and remunerative work. We shall, in the process of recovery, seek to move as rapidly as possible from direct relief to publicly supported work and from that to the rapid restoration of private employment.

It is to the eternal credit of the American people that this tremendous readjustment of our National life is being accomplished peacefully, without serious dislocation, with only a minimum of injustice and with a great, willing spirit of cooperation throughout the country.

Disorder is not an American habit. Self-help and self-control are the essence of the American tradition—not of necessity the form of that tradition, but its spirit. The program itself comes from the American people.

It is an integrated program, National in scope. Viewed in the large, it is designed to save from destruction and to keep for the future the genuinely important values created by modern society. The vicious and wasteful parts of that society we could not save if we wished; they have chosen the way of self-destruction. We would save useful mechanical invention, machine production, industrial efficiency, modern means of communication, broad education. We would save and encourage the slowly growing impulse among consumers to enter the industrial market place equipped with sufficient organization to insist upon fair prices and honest sales.

Past Industrial Evils Taboo in New Plan.

But the unnecessary expansion of industrial plants, the waste of natural resources, the exploitation of the consumers of natural monopolies, the accumulation of stagnant surpluses, child labor, and the ruthless exploitation of all labor, the encouragement of speculation with other people's money, these were consumed in the fires that they themselves kindled; we must make sure that as we reconstruct our life there be no soil in which such weeds can grow again.

We have plowed the furrow and planted the good seed; the hard beginning is over. If we would reap the full harvest we must cultivate the soil where this good seed is sprouting and the plant is reaching up to mature growth.

A final personal word. I know that each of you will appreciate that I am speaking no mere politeness when I assure you how much I value the fine relationship that we have shared during these months of hard and incessant work. Out of these friendly contacts we are, fortunately, building a strong and permanent tie between the legislative and executive branches of the Government. The letter of the Constitution wisely declared a separation, but the impulse of common purpose declares a union. In this spirit we join once more in serving the American people.

Marriages Set Record in Two Virginia Areas

Albemarle, Rockingham in 1933 Were Busy Spots for Dan Cupid.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Despite the depression, Dan Cupid was busy in the city and county during the past year.

Marriage licenses were granted in the two clerks' offices to 395 couples, an increase of 70 over 1932.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Dan Cupid was active in 1933, according to the records of the Rockingham County clerk.

The marriage license bureau issued 261 permits, more than any year since 1922, when the total was 263—an 11-year record.

Charters for business concerns dropped to seven. Deeds recorded were 83 under the preceding year.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Deaths and births in Hagerstown and Washington County were fewer in 1933 than in 1932.

The decrease in deaths was attributed, by Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, to improved health conditions. There were 50 fewer births in 1933 than in 1932.

There was a corresponding decrease in cases of infectious and contagious diseases. In 1932 there were about 2,000 cases against 1,538 cases in 1933.

For the third successive year this county, once a center of smallpox contagion, was without a single case. For the second successive year there were no deaths from typhoid fever or scarlet fever.

The death rate here in 1932 was 12.01 per thousand population, while in 1933 it was 11.85 per thousand.

Staunton Stores Hit By $100,000 Fire

Flames Rage for 3 Hours; Big Stocks Destroyed.

Staunton, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Insurance adjusters today investigated the ruins of the Witz Building to learn the exact loss in a fire which swept the structure yesterday.

Originating from an overheated furnace, the flames caused damage estimated at $100,000. The fire raged for more than three hours and the assistance of a pump truck from the Waynesboro department was necessary.

Principal damage was done to the stores of Harry Walters, Inc., and the Merit Shoe Co. All stock and most of the fixtures there were believed ruined. Heavy damage was done also to the stock of the Palais Royal store.

Roanoke Ponders New Voters' List

Clearing 'Deadwood' From Books Considered.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—A new registration of Roanoke voters to make a thorough house-cleaning of the "deadwood" on the registration lists, is being considered by the city electoral board, according to S. R. Wheeler, secretary.

Under the law the board may call for a new registration as often as every ten years.

Miss Elizabeth Woods, recently appointed central registrar, has assumed her duties. She succeeded Charles R. Lescure who resigned to take a post as deputy under the newly elected commissioner of revenue, former Judge John M. Hart.

State Widening Of Pike Begins At Strasburg

Original Route Selected After City Protest; New Dam Planned.

Strasburg, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Widening the Valley pike over its original course through the business section of Strasburg has been started by the Virginia Highway Department, using PWA funds.

A quarry at Fishers' Hill, which will supply crushed stone, has been opened. The sidewalk on the east side of Main street will be narrowed by a foot and a half, and telephone and power poles will be shifted from the street to the rear of the buildings.

The highway department first planned to route away from the main section, but after a fight by the town council, the State agreed to rebuild along the old route if Strasburg would pay $17,000 in extra costs.

221 Busy in Winchester.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—The weekly pay roll for the 221 men on civil works projects in Winchester totals $2,437.95.

Two more men will be added, and the services of all 223 men will be required until February 15, when the projects should be completed.

Some men have been returned to work on the town run project, after property owners provided necessary rights of way.

City Asks Dam Fund.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—This city has applied for a $50,000 PWA loan to construct a submerged dam to conserve the water in the Riven Rock watershed, from which the city obtains its water.

The council voted this application upon recommendation of A. B. McDaniel, Washington engineer.

Harrisonburg has an ample water supply except in extremely dry years. Mr. McDaniel says the low dam, on bed rock of the Dry River source, will impound sufficient water to carry the city through any periods of drought. An impounding reservoir, costing half a million dollars, is believed too expensive and will not be considered until the dam is tried.

Courthouse Loan Argued.

Front Royal, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—A contest has developed in Warren county upon the proposition to borrow $50,000 of PWA funds to remodel the courthouse. The loan will be voted on Monday at a special election.

A new factor was injected into the contest when it became known that if the proposal is rejected, Judge Phillip Williams of the circuit court will require the county to provide suitable court facilities, to be paid for by a direct tax levy.

It is understood these improvements include a jury room, an office for the judge, a fireproof vault for court records and a heating system.

Three Girls Hunted After School Escape

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Police here have been notified to be on the lookout for Dorothy Manning, 14, of Hagerstown, an inmate of the Montrose School for Girls at Reisterstown, Md., who escaped with two other girls.

Light Dockets Before Courts As Year Begins

Two in Leesburg Accused of Hold-up Attempt; Alleged Killer Held.

Leesburg, Va. Jan. 3 (Spl.).—The grand jury tomorrow will consider the cases of Jim Jackson and Charlie Coates, both colored, of Paeonian Springs, held in connection with the attempted hold-up of A. C. Corbin, filling station proprietor, in Hamilton, December 23.

Corbin received a slight scalp wound from a bullet. The men fled without getting any money. According to Sheriff E. S. Adrian, Jackson has confessed, implicating Coates.

Robert Longerbeam, of Philomont, also will face the grand jury tomorrow. He is held in connection with the killing of Henry Mercer the night of December 22.

Light Roanoke Docket.

Roanoke, Va. Jan. 3 (Spl.).—The 38 appeals cases set for hearing in Hustings court tomorrow form the smallest docket here for some time. A light criminal docket also faces the court. At the opening of the term Tuesday, indictments were returned by the grand jury. Judge John Paul of United States District Court said at the opening of court here that he intended to continue all prohibition cases possible and to suspend sentence until a supreme court ruling in such cases going to trial is obtained.

The judge commented that prohibition "never was more than a police regulation, and little better than a parking ordinance," but added that the fact the law was violated "a week or so before it was repealed" is no reason for excusing a violator.

Held in Killing.

Danville, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Roy Cook is held in Stuart Jail charged with killing Otis Owen near the North Carolina line, and awaits action by the March grand jury of the Patrick County Circuit Court.

Cook claimed Owen had committed suicide, but authorities could not reconcile this theory with the wound in the head, and Cook was charged with the killing.

13 Face Trial in Bristol.

Bristol, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Indicted by a special grand jury here, 13 men were brought to trial today before Judge Floyd H. Roberts.

Two major cases were passed over for action at the regular March term. One was the charge of criminal attack brought against four young men accused by a 16-year-old girl. The girl was not present as the grand jury convened, and her mother told Commonwealth's Attorney Love B. Rouse her daughter had either been taken away from the city or was persuaded not to appear.

The other was the case charging H. C. Gibson, of Lancaster, Pa., formerly of Scott County, Va., of defrauding the Farmers Livestock Market here of a shipment of stock. Gibson, who posted bond, was extradited from Pennsylvania several weeks ago.

Outstanding among the cases to be heard today is that of Sam Howard, charged with housebreaking and larceny and felonious assault by stabbing and hitting Miss Jane Kenny, September 8. Howard was extradited from North Carolina.

Allegany Jury Meets.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—William T. Lakin was named foreman of the January grand jury, which convened yesterday. In his charge, Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan referred to the new liquor law for the county. More than 100 temporary liquor licenses were granted, and the court reminded that this number would be scaled one-half, as but one license can be granted for each 1,500 population in the county. The census shows a population of 79,098, so there can not be more than 52 licenses.

It was cited that there had been report of violations of the law by some holders of temporary licenses as well as licenses for the sale of beer granted in April.

Nottoway to Join Byrd Road Plan

Commission Approves Step 4 Contracts Awarded.

Richmond, Jan. 3 (AP).—The State Highway Commission today gave its formal consent for Nottoway County to join under the Byrd Road Plan Law, and confirmed awards on four bridge contracts.

The contracts are: Overhead crossing at Sebrell, Route 35, Southampton County, John Pettijohn & Co., Lynchburg, $8,707.70; bridge over North River, Buena Vista, Route 60, Rockbridge County, Preston & Pollard, Bedford, $56,829.82; bridge over Buffalo Creek, Route 127 in Campbell County, near Evington, J. I. Hicks & Bros., of Evington, $6,775.20; bridge over Wilson Creek at Mouth of Wilson, Route 58, Grayson County, Alley Construction Co., Bristol, $9,249.

Nottoway was one of four counties which originally declined to embrace the Byrd Road Plan for the State operation of the secondary highway system.

Cattle Purchases Start in Virginia

Federal Funds Are Used to Buy Surplus.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Purchase of surplus cattle from Virginia farmers and processing of beef for distribution to needy families by the Virginia Emergency Association has been authorized by the National Administration, it was learned here.

Paul L. Fletcher is purchasing cattle for the Administration.

The work is under the direction of John H. Wright, director of the surplus food division of the relief organization. The cattle are to be proccessed at a Richmond packing house.

Mild-Mannered "Cave Man" Tells of 60 Years in Caverns

retired Herndon farmer, who has devoted 60 years of his life to the hobby-study of Virginia's caverns. He is shown holding a section of stalactite; and a glass pitcher, broken, and left in Weyer's Cave by his mother more than half a century ago. Remaining there 48 years, a solid limestone encrustation formed, mending it perfectly.

Isaac T. Long, of Herndon, Has Passed Lifetime Beneath Virginia.

Finds Electricity Only Has Produced Proper Appreciation.

Herndon, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Isaac T. Long may be known as Herndon's "cave man," but he certainly doesn't look the part.

No savage barbarian, but an immaculate 67-year-old gentleman with snow-white hair and devout old school Baptist mannerisms, he lives in a little bungalow on a quiet Herndon street. It is here that he speaks smilingly of the hobby that has earned him his title.

"People call me a 'cave man,'" he admits, "and I guess I am one in a way. Caves have been my hobby for 60 years."

Long has spent years studying nearly every cavern in Virginia. There are shelves in the Long home that are packed with strange specimens—from stalagmites to petrified blind fish. He can outline the technical explanation of these strange lime formations; hazard a good guess on the centuries spent in their construction, and even trace by faint circles inside the stone, preceding eras of flood or drought.

Began Explorations at 3.

Born at historic Fort Long, six miles from Luray, in the heart of the cavern country, his love for these underground wonders of nature took shape when he was in knee breeches. When just three years old, he was taken by his mother through Weyer's Cave, 19 miles from Staunton, now known, together with nearby Madison Cave and the Cave of the Phantoms, as Grand Caverns. Weyer's Cave then was the property of his grandfather, Jacob Hohler, of Rockbridge County, who bought it in the days following the Civil War when a jaunt through an underground cavern was considered a reckless venture into some mysterious world. Upon his death, it passed into the hands of Long's mother, and by the time Long was ten years old, he was as familiar with its intricate network of passages as any guide.

Not until the era of electricity, Long says, has man been able to fully appreciate the wonders and beauties of the caverns. He gives a graphic description of the old days when trips through the caves were conducted by candle-light that flickered dimly, sputtered in every draft, and sometimes died out among shrieks of the women in the party who often were prevented from hysteria in the terrifying darkness only by quick relighting on the part of the guide.

Cathedral Hall Opened.

"In those days," Long says, "both guides and sightseers carried long tallow candles eight or nine inches in length, set in crude, home-made reflectors, fixed to the end of a long pole. These could dimly suggest only the wonders of the caverns. Particularly, were they inadequate in Weyer's Cave, whose chief magnificence is the vastness of its ceiling, hundreds of feet high. This was not fully revealed to the public until an electric system was installed in 1925. Since then, it has been called 'Cathedral Hall.'"

Long has had many a cavern adventure: flirting with death while scaling brittle cavern walls; finding himself lost along a deep, unexplored passage, a mile underground, with his stock of candles running low, and his shouts muffled and returned to him by the thick walls; forced to retreat backward on his hands and knees along tortuous passages that tapered abruptly to an end.

Once, when he was 17, Long took a ladder into a little explored chamber far to the rear of the Grand Caverns. Propping it up against the wall, holding a torch in one hand and a coal drill in the other, he set to work chipping away at an especially beautiful specimen of stalactite close to the roof. As he was drilling the last section, his chisel penetrated a water pocket in the ceiling. Pouring down on him, it washed him from his ladder, doused his torch, and left him wet and alone in the Stygian blackness! Only his sense of direction, developed through months spent in the cave, saw him through this experience.

The simplest adequate equipment for a would-be amateur cavern explorer, according to a veteran like Long, is a good electric torch, backed up by a box of candles, a pack of chocolate, a stout stick, and a ball of heavy twine. The stick should be used in testing the floor ahead for hollow crusts, which might break and plunge an explorer into cavities of unknown depths below; while the twine, fastened at the starting point and, unwound step by step, is dependable insurance against the dreaded cry of "lost!"

"For nothing is easier," Long declares, "than losing oneself in the pitch darkness of a cavern. Even with a torch, the twisting walls and great rocks can be seen, but not remembered accurately. And believe me, nothing seems quite as terrible as knowing you are trapped in the silence of one of these labyrinths. There always is the possibility uppermost in your mind that you may wander so deeply in them that even the search parties will fail to find you. This danger has been eliminated in the tourist caverns of today, of course. But in my time, it was an ever-present hazard."

Long is proud of the fact that as a boy of 7, he was a member of the first party invited to inspect Luray Cave after its discovery. The party consisted of himself and three women—his mother, Miss Fanny Mohler, his aunt, and Miss Ellen Pagaud, his governess. Although the entrance to Luray Cave then was just a gaping hole in the ground with sectional ladders providing the steep and dangerous means of descent, Long relates that these three women pulled the billowing skirts of their day tightly about them and made the descent without a murmur.

Recalls the "Bird's Nest."

Returning covered with mud, but thrilled, Long says, "I have never yet seen anything as beautiful as the Luray Bird's Nest, now destroyed. At that time, it was formed in the depths of the cave, standing 3 feet high, like an inverted bowl with a deep hole in the center, where water trickled down upon three snow-white stones that looked exactly like partridge eggs. The whole of the crystallized rock was fashioned so delicately by nature that as the water dropped upon it you could see its vibrations."

Surveyor and farmer, Long says that if he lived in a day when cavern commercialization was as prosperous and general as it is now, he would have made caverns his life work. As it is, he literally is a walking encyclopedia of cavern information.

He can inform you that cave temperatures never vary all the year around from their usual 58 degrees. He will illustrate the technical difference between the stalacites and stalagmites so that even a layman can understand. And he can recite true stories of Virginia cavern history that will make anyone sit up and take notice.

He can tell you that Weyer's Cave was used as a dance floor by Augusta County young people's organizations long before the Civil War; that dates carved in the wall of the Virginia Caverns, north of Harrisonburg, go back as far as 1790, while Indian relics were found in some of its chambers, and that many of the State's caves were used as hiding places by squads of Federal and Confederate soldiers during the Civil War.

False Fire Alarm Jam Hurts Women

Crowd Rushes Out After Cry Over Furnace Glow.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Several women were slightly injured when they fainted and were trampled, after some one cried "fire" at a crowded performance of a "Walkathon" contest, in progress here for eight weeks at the Fair Association Auditorium.

Special officers opened doors when part of the crowd dashed for the outside. When the alarm was found false, the audience returned.

The cry was raised when some one opened a door to a large temporary heating plant, and saw the reflection of the furnace fire.

Myers Named To Cut Hazards Of Civil Works

Virginia Bureau Set Up Because Accidents Are Increasing.

Richmond, Jan. 3 (AP).—Col. William M. Myers, former director of the City Department of Public Safety here and for years managing director of the Richmond Safety Council, has been placed in charge of the Bureau of Safety just established here in an effort to reduce the hazards of Civil Works jobs.

Injuries thus far reported in Virginia have been comparatively few, but the bureau was set up as a result of the alarm felt by the National Civil Works Administration over the growing number of accidents, many of them fatal, throughout the country. Col. Myers, recognized as a safety expert, was "borrowed" from the safety council immediately after State Administrator W. A. Smith received a telegram from Harry L. Hopkins, National Administrator, which told of the hazards.

The State Civil Works Administration yesterday approved 157 projects, 42 being State and the others Federal.

Eight of the Federal projects call for a total outlay of $247,000 on the Shenandoah National Park. Page County gets the biggest slice, $65,311; Greene gets $32,733; Rappahannock, $32,963; Rockingham, $27,156; Madison, $27,156; Albemarle, $17,636; Augusta, $17,636, and Warren, $27,156.

It was estimated that the total number of projects approved today will provide at least 1,000 additional jobs in the State at large and will involve an expenditure of more than $500,000.

Madison Gets $2,600.

Luray, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Two "economic buildings" in Madison County will each receive $2,600 cash for improvement under Civil Works Administrator W. V. Barnes. Mr. Barnes has been notified that Madison County is entitled to 16,600 more man-hours than originally was given laboring men under the first apportionment. The county's first payment for labor under Civil Works Administrator Barnes, amounting to $1,700, was paid Saturday.

Breakaway!

Prisoner Leaves Part of Vest With Police.

Bristol, Va.-Tenn., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Part of a vest was all officers had to show for "Rooster" Dishman when his name was called in Virginia police court yesterday on a drunk and disorderly charge.

"Rooster," who has been in custody before, broke away from Officer Jim Ingoldsby, who retained part of the vest, while "Rooster" made off across the railroad yards nearby with the rest.

With several other prisoners, Dishman had just been escorted from the jail door toward police court across the street. Dishman suddenly broke away and negotiated the 300 or more yards to the Tennessee State line, and safety, in record-breaking time.

Tax Rate Set At 90 Cents In Frederick

Largest Item of Expense Is $296,000, Fixed for Schools.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Frederick commissioners have announced the new county tax rate at 90 cents on the $100.

The basis on which the rate is fixed at $62,534,178, yielding a revenue of $646,979.50. The real estate basis is $46,705,534, yielding $420,034, the remainder including other sources of revenue.

The rate for the preceding six months was 41 cents on the $100, the budget being compiled for that period to make the fiscal year the same as the calendar year. The new rate is a reduction of more than 25 per cent of three years ago.

The largest item of expenses in the budget is $296,000 for schools. The school commissioners asked for $340,186.60, but the latter sum was reduced about $44,000. The commissioners also appropriated $5,000 due to the schools from the six months' period, July 1 to December 31, 1933. The next largest appropriation is $76,974.50, for interest on bonds. This amount includes interest on bonds totaling $186,000, which the commissioners sold at a lower interest rate.

The sum of $30,000 was appropriated for Montevue Hospital and $23,500 for the State Hospital for the Insane. Ten thousand dollars was set aside for emergency bonds and $18,000 for the sinking fund.

Land Sold at Leesburg.

Leesburg, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Twenty tracts of land, with delinquent taxes amounting to $138, out of the 224 pieces offered for sale, were bought by individuals at the annual delinquent land sale held by Treasurer Howard E. Cole.

The remaining pieces were taken over by the State. A total of 777 pieces was advertised for sale a month ago. Belated taxpayers speeded up in their payments and brought the number down to about 30 per cent of the original. Delinquent taxes due on pieces sold amounted to $4,758.26.

Last year 192 pieces were offered for sale, with delinquent taxes amounting to $5,325.78.

County Eases Treasury Tieup

Albemarle Checks Passed, Signed by 2 Claimants in Controversy.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.). Albemarle County tonight had two persons acting as treasurer, but county business was being transacted as usual. Stuart Hamm, who refused to surrender office to the new county government, continued to collect taxes. Henry Haden, county executive and director of finance in the new regime, has set up an office in the courthouse and started collecting county funds.

Danger that county deposits would be tied up during this legal controversy, was removed today by an agreement whereby both men agreed to sign checks disbursing Albemarle money. The National Bank & Trust Co. of Charlottesville, which yesterday refused to honor checks signed any other way, today passed three for $53,597.

Hamm contends he is a constitutional officer, elected to December 31, 1935, and that he has no right to surrender his office until the courts rule on the matter. He is under $215,000 bond.

The NCBHCC.

Not even the imaginative gentleman who used to come out of trances with agonizing names for new Pullman cars could be ashamed of the National Commercial Breeder and Hatchery Coordinating Committee, which has just been set up under the AAA.

The new code authority promises to work a reform in the egg-laying industry by refusing to use eggs for hatching that weigh less than 23 ounces to the dozen, "no single egg weighing less than 1 5-6 ounces." Hens have got to do better in the future if they do not want to see their day's work lost in a grand scramble of undersized eggs. Another provision under the code is that "There shall be payment for overtime and it is required that male and female workers performing the same work shall receive the same rate of pay." Fortunately that provision applies only to human beings who tend the hatcheries; otherwise roosters would be at an extreme disadvantage.

But it is not to praise the provisions of the code that this is written; it is to bow in tribute before the genius of the great initialler. For instance, anybody could have named the AAA or the CCC; all you do is to take three identic initials and slap them together. The FERA was a better job, by one letter, and the FHLBB was heretofore a high-water mark. Now we have NCBHCC—and the New Deal not yet a year old!

Jakob Wassermann.

News of the death of Jakob Wassermann, who had been living in retirement in Austria, will be received with deep regret by lovers of good literature in every country. Last May his name was expunged from the roster of the Prussian Academy of Art, along with that of other distinguished writers whose brilliance of style and sincerity of thought have gained for them an international reputation. Even if Wassermann had not been a Jew, he undoubtedly would have fallen under the official ban of the Prussian minister of culture. He was that type of liberal thinker for whom there is no place in a country where the state has become the dictatorial master instead of the servant of the people.

Whether consciously or not, Wassermann's writings convey one clear, unmistakable message—his feeling that organized society exists to enrich the mind and increase the material happiness of individuals, not to force human beings to conform blindly to tyrannical social dictates. Wassermann indeed was concerned primarily with individuals, in spite of his superficial emphasis upon social problems. He was not a writer of those deadly hybrid products known as sociological novels. His stories have plots and are made interesting by vivid descriptions and varied incidents. But like most fiction of distinction, Wassermann's writing is highly subjective in character. Events are important because they throw light upon men's motives and the external environment is interesting chiefly because of its effect upon men's characters.

The idealism which redeems much that otherwise might seem sordid or merely sensational, and the keen sense of justice which pervades his work, enabled Wassermann to exert an influence upon liberal thought felt far beyond the boundaries of his native land. His rejection by the present German government was the logical outcome of its intolerant and debasing censorship. It was a mark of distinction which Jakob Wassermann shares with a large number of Germany's most able and devoted former citizens.

Gift Cigars.

Ewing Y. Mitchell, Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of the United States Shipping Board Bureau and five other divisions, has demonstrated his suitability for high office by returning the Christmas gift of the Black Diamond Steamship Co. and ordering all his subordinates to do likewise.

Black Diamond, which figured in the Senate investigation of mail contract subsidies in a not-so-favorable episode involving alleged loans and "extra labor" payments to Steve O'Connor, son of a former chairman of the Shipping Board, sent a "wagonload" of cigars to officials and employes of the bureau. One official received seven boxes of 50 cent cigars; Mr. Mitchell, who was not appreciated so highly, got only one box. His secretary, who does not smoke cigars, got an "inexpensive compact." The Assistant Secretary promptly ordered the return of all presents and, sending back his own remembrance, said in a letter: "I do not think it good practice for a Government official to accept gifts, even of small value, from those with whom he has, or may have, business relations."

The Post does not subscribe to the statement of H. B. Arledge, agent for the company, that Mr. Mitchell was making trouble over a trivial matter. On the contrary, Mr. Mitchell was eminently correct and set an example that should be universally followed, aside from the fact that it is illegal for a Government employe to accept gifts calculated to influence favorable action in behalf of the donor. If the Black Diamond Co. feels it desirable to employ blandishments in its relations with Government employes, the conclusions drawn will not be flattering to that organization.

The President's Message.

As a people we are painfully prone to hyperbole. On December 3, 1929, President Hoover informed Congress that the problems confronting the United States were those "of growth and of progress," adding to this his conviction that the Administration had at that date "reestablished confidence." Yesterday, four years and one month later, President Roosevelt, asserting that "civilization can not go back," appealed to the present Congress for cooperation "to build on the ruins of the past a new structure designed better to meet the problems of modern civilization."

If civilization can not go back—and history is all too full of evidences that retrogression is easy—it becomes pertinent to ask how the imaginative castles of just a few years back could be transformed into the "ruins" which Mr. Roosevelt sees behind us today. The answer, of course, is that the present occupant of the White House exaggerates the extent of the collapse we have experienced, just as his predecessor failed dismally to realize the magnitude of the crisis through which the country has been passing. Civilization in the Hegelian concept, has never moved along a single plane, where the terms "forward" and "back" have clear-cut meaning. It has, rather, followed a spiral development, often tracing a retrograde course which in due time leads upwards to emergence on a higher level than had been gained before.

It is such an evolution, we presume, which President Roosevelt had in mind when he said, with a pride shared by all his fellow-citizens, that "this tremendous readjustment of our National life is being accomplished peacefully, without serious dislocation, with only a minimum of injustice and with a great, willing spirit of cooperation throughout the country." If there were nothing but ruins behind us something far more than readjustments would be needed now. Lenin, in 1917, could properly speak of rebuilding upon ruins. Not so Roosevelt, in 1934.

And just as the President would be the first to agree that the National structure is architecturally sound, needing readjustment rather than rebuilding, so must all of his auditors yesterday have concurred in the central thesis that the job today is "to make our economic and social structure capable of dealing with modern life." For the obtaining of such an objective there is, of course, no one panacea on which all will agree. Undue interference by the State may easily hamper rather than improve the smooth functioning of the economic organization on which we all depend. But that, too, is recognized by the President, both in his admission that "hurriedly devised machinery may need readjustment from time to time" and in his tribute to self-help and self-control—as opposed to dictatorial regimentation—as "the essence of the American tradition."

The President yesterday dealt in generalities, a field in which the warmth of his personality and the depth of his social conscience make him an inspiring speaker. Presumably, as the session of Congress proceeds, he will have occasion later to address more specific recommendations on specific legislative projects. There can be no disagreement on the need for cooperative planning to "restore a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work." And there is particular effectiveness, at this moment, in Mr. Roosevelt's closing suggestion that while the Constitution wisely declares a separation between Legislative and Executive, "the impulse of common purpose declares a union."

A Note For Congress.

Some Administration spokesmen are not entirely happy about the way in which the PWA has distributed its appropriation of $3,300,000,000 for public works. Chairman Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, finds that "there have been numerous instances where they (the PWA officials) have transferred money for projects that Congress previously had turned down." With the aid of several influential colleagues, Mr. Buchanan is preparing an amendment to the present law with the view of forbidding the PWA in future to override the will of Congress.

It is patently absurd for Congress to study appropriation bills, with due regard for the requirements of each department and the prospective Federal revenue, and then to have its appropriations supplemented by large grants from another Federal agency. For example, the Navy Department's appropriation was sharply reduced. But the PWA allowed $238,000,000 to that department for construction of fighting vessels. Nineteen bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, and even a larger number in some other departments, were allowed PWA funds over and above their regular appropriations. Some of the projects thus financed have been repeatedly eliminated from appropriation bills, and a few have been definitely rejected by Congress. At least one project—the Verde River irrigation dam in Arizona designed to bring a large area of new land under cultivation—was approved in spite of adverse reports from engineers hired by the Government.

It does not appear, however, that the PWA is entirely responsible for the inconsistencies of this program. Congress gave the President and his agents an enormous sum to spend on public works at their discretion. Then many individual members of that august body used their influence to bring about rapid expenditure of this money. Complaints that the PWA has financed undertakings that could never have been approved by Congress are now too belated to be effective. Congress ought to expect results of this kind when it indulges in haphazard and undigested legislation.

The interest of Representative Buchanan and other House leaders in this matter is significant chiefly because it may lead to more careful scrutiny of vital measures in the present session. Congress can not relinquish its responsibility for the control of expenditure simply by transferring discretion to an executive body. The logical answer to Mr. Buchanan's criticism is more discreet legislation on Capitol Hill.

Rumanian Fascists.

There is no obscurity behind the anxiety which caused Nicholas Titulescu, Rumanian foreign minister, to hurry home from Geneva after the assassination of Premier Duca and to threaten resignation unless the government adopted a more vigorous policy toward the rising Fascist movement in his country. That M. Titulescu has now withdrawn his threat and has announced that the conference of the Little Entente, scheduled for January 8, is to be held, indicates that the serious situation in Rumania has been somewhat eased.

Since the death of the Bratianus, father and sons, M. Titulescu has been the "strong man" of Rumania. Closely associated for years with Eduard Benes, the Czechoslovakian foreign minister, M. Titulescu is regarded back home almost like M. Benes, as "perpetual foreign minister." So powerful is the Rumanian statesman that in 1932 his disapproval of the foreign policy of Premier Vaida-Voevod overthrew the cabinet. He remained in the new Maniu ministry as foreign minister and has survived a second term of Vaida-Voevod and the short-lived ministry of Duca, who was assassinated last week.

It was that assassination which has disturbed M. Titulescu, because it was accomplished apparently by the "Iron Guard," the Fascist organization which, under the leadership of Prof. Cuza, has been growing steadily. The raids and riots conducted by the organization had become such a menace that a cabinet meeting late in November voted to deal drastically with the situation. As foreign minister, M. Titulescu sees the international dangers of a Fascist movement whose primary passion is hatred of Jews and Communists.

Rumania already is distressed by her minorities question. Versailles gave her Bessarabia, with a great Russian population. M. Titulescu endeavored over reiterated protests from Moscow to defeat ratification of a nonaggression treaty with Russia until that country had renounced the right to claim Bessarabia. A Fascist movement directed partly against Communists would create trouble for Rumania in Bessarabia and severely strain relations with Russia. Besides, it would open up the Bessarabian question under circumstances unfavorable to Rumania.

Worse than that, however, an anti-Semitic movement in Eastern Europe might have the most serious consequences. In that section of the continent pogroms have flared and taken hundreds of lives in the past; in that part of Europe the Jew still wears the kaftan and practices the orthodoxy of centuries ago, and in so doing, presents a target for political demagogues such as Prof. Cuza and other leaders of his "Iron Guard."

A Correspondent Looks for the Worst in the East.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Associated Press dispatch, dated Honolulu, December 14, reported the seizure by Collector of Customs Walter Doyle, of some 1,200 pamphlets discussing "the impending war between the United States and Japan," inserted in a Japanese magazine to be distributed among Japanese readers in Hawaii, is no news to us orientals; it is almost proverbial. The surprising and rather gratifying news in the dispatch is the fact that even the United States customs officers are beginning to pay a belated attention to the war talk emanating from Tokyo.

The report further stated that the article written by a retired Japanese navy officer, "describing a vivid account of naval and air warfare in 1936, ending with Japanese occupation of the Hawaiian Islands," and that "publishers of the magazine have disclaimed any responsibility for the article or any knowledge of how it was attached to copies of the publication." I wonder why the publishers have so far failed to declare that the "pamphlets" were, like the famous Tanaka memorial, a forgery.

Is it the first time that such printed matter has been imported to the United States for Japanese consumption? Is this "war dream" only an individual idea of a retired navy officer, unsupported by the rank and file of a Japanese people? Why, it has been, to my knowledge, a part and parcel of the Japanese national educational system for the last twenty-five years, and I for one can name a list of books and magazine articles in Japanese devoted to that subject. As late as the end of November 1932, I was present, my identity unknown, in an audience of nearly a hundred Japanese who were assembled in their Embassy at Washington, to hear speeches delivered by several high officers including the head of Japanese naval attaches, on the subject of the occupation of Manchuria. The first speaker was no less distinguished a personage than Hiroshi Saito himself, who is now known as the successor of Katsuji Debuchi, resigned. All the speakers frankly discussed in their own language, of course, "the Japanese-American war," as inevitable and Japanese occupation of Hawaii as a first step of the attack. Indeed, they went far beyond that point but I will not go into it, for the American public is not ready for such information as yet. Did the Chinese in 1894 and the Russians in 1904 take seriously any report of a Japanese war seriously before the outbreak of hostilities? No, they took it just as a joke.

It was only last week when the Japanese-American Daily of Los Angeles printed a Tokyo dispatch informing that the Army and Navy Departments have decided to train young women to do the men's work in ammunition factories, when men are called out to the field in "the 1935-36 campaign." That period is known throughout the Island Empire as a most perilous era when the nation will engage itself in a life or death struggle. All the Japanese at home and abroad are fully aware that in the year, 1935, Japan's withdrawal from the League of Nations will become officially completed and that at the international naval conference which will convene that year at the termination of the Washington and London treaties, Japan will demand an increase in the Anglo-American-Japanese naval ratio from 5-5-3 to 10-8-7. It means a war that year any way, as far as Japan is concerned, whether the demand is granted or denied. Are there not, they argue, some vulnerable points on the part of the Western powers, with their far-flung dominions in the East? Are the questions of racial equality and free immigration satisfactorily settled? Thus it is perfectly clear to their mind that what can not be achieved through diplomacy can only be achieved by the sword.

In this potential conflict, neither the ostrich policy of closing its eyes and ears to the impending danger, nor the advocacy of peace-at-any cost will save the situation; they only court disaster. The only possibility of safeguarding the peace of the Pacific lies in the adoption of Theodore Roosevelt's famous saying, "speak softly but carry a big stick." In other words, it is a superior force, not weakness, of the United States that will maintain at least "an armed peace" on the Pacific.

Praise for the Post and Mr. Robey in Particular.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Among the many letters you receive, remember mine as one of congratulation and encouragement. The Post seems to have taken a new lease on life. We were talking about papers the other evening and I said, "If I were a newspaper man I'd rather work for The Post than any other paper in town," to which a newsman retorted, "Who the devil wouldn't?"

One thing I noticed that seems lovely—the signed column—it gives a more human appeal. Now we come to the real motive for this letter, Ralph West Robey. I didn't know he was alive until so many criticisms were quoted on the editorial page. Now I am a confirmed reader. He may be wrong all along the line but he is sure enough to be emphatic and that is what we need—some one to make us sit up and take notice. A lot of folks are going to complain, and now when it is almost an act of heroism to step out of line with the popular propaganda, I do hope The Post will continue to print things as they see them. How would it be possible for me to procure the past reviews that have appeared in The Post?

The above statement I made concerning propaganda does not necessarily mean I oppose in any degree the present policies, for I admire Roosevelt immensely. He knows he has the whole country by the ears, but he's got his chance to try something and we surely had enough of watchful waiting. We can't lose much and stand to win if there are any winnings.

I wish you all the success in the world. THELMA BUCHANAN.

Advice to Mr. Bargeron.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Reading "Along the Potomac" with Mr. Carlisle Bargeron and being a reader of The Washington Post for the past ten years, I want to say that the Republican party does not have to labor. It is the Democratic party that is going to labor to right itself. And does Mr. Bargeron think that the Republicans are playing politics by sitting still? If they would do what the majority of the people wants every Congressman and Senator to do, it would be to cut out this one-man power and restore this Nation back to the platform that Mr. Roosevelt was elected on.

Now, if the Democratic party made this mistake let them right it—not call on the Republicans so they can place the blame and say the Republicans were the cause of it. You may watch the greatest senator of all times—and that our Senator-Carter Glass—liked by both Republicans and Democrats, and see if he asks anyone to fight his battles for him. J. D. PRICE.

He Replies to Mr. Magruder.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The contradictions in Mr. Magruder's letter, printed in The Post of December 25, are both amusing and pathetic. In his opinion it seems that he alone has a right to criticize in a Nation where criticism is, or should be, banned.

If the "Perfect State," in the opinion of Mr. Magruder, is one in which the people can not or should not criticize the Government or the administration, I suggest, for his own happiness and satisfaction that he remove himself to Italy, Germany or Russia.

But in America we shall continue to exercise our constitutional right of free speech regardless of the uncomplimentary names applied by spokesmen of the administration to those who do not agree with its policies.

Should Mr. Magruder care to discuss points raised in his and my letter, I would be very glad to do so.

A Kingdom Is Doomed When the People Learn and the King Doesn't

By Robert Quillen

Somewhere in France there lives a captain of the Legion of Honor who was once reviled by his countrymen as the worst of traitors.

There was no evidence against him except a letter, in handwriting resembling his, that offered military secrets to the Germans.

Years after he was sent to an island prison, faithful friends discovered evidence that established his innocence and revealed the man who was guilty.

But other years passed and France was shamed before the world and torn with strife at home before justice was done.

What prolonged the tragic injustice? The fact that stubborn old men, having formed an opinion, were unwilling to change it. The fact that officials, made haughty and cruel by the exercise of power, were willing to see an innocent man suffer rather than admit their error.

There you have a classic example of the human weakness that makes all power a menace.

Much of the "new deal" consists in correcting the tragic blunders of "great" men who meant well.

Two national leaders, with power to dominate the world, tangled mankind's affairs at incalculable cost by contemptuously rejecting Bullitt's advice concerning Russia.

Ignorance and age and the pride of power had closed their minds.

Men who have great power can see the truth only by inspiration.

They are surrounded by yes-men. Those who dare to disagree are fired. They are told the things they wish to hear. They are denied the guidance of honest criticism.

Every man is his own partisan. He believes himself right. And when all about him assure him that he is right and the exercise of power multiplies his sense of greatness, as it inevitably does, not only the mercy of God will keep him from walking unawares into pitfalls and dragging a nation with him.

The true symbol of greatness is humility and humility is neither unwilling to learn nor afraid to change.

Along the Potomac

With
Carlisle Bargeron

THE answer to the oft-repeated question of what the present Congress will be was given yesterday, I think, itself. It sat but mildly demonstrative through all of Mr. Roosevelt's reading of his message until one statement was reached. It sat quietly through the most important part of his speech, the first public declaration on Mr. Roosevelt's part that the Revolution is here to stay, that it was not an emergency program after all, but a permanent one from which there can be no turning back. If this sank in at all there was no outward evidence of it.

BARGERON.

Similarly it sat slightly blushing and with members looking slyly at their neighbors as Mr. Roosevelt told them that at the last session it was their "fine understanding of the National problem that furnished the example which the country has so splendidly followed."

Of course, the only understanding which Congress had when it passed the emergency program, then called, was that it did not understand anything except that it had better keep quiet and sign on the dotted line.

Through all of this and the rest of the speech there was, save for scattering applause, no outburst until Mr. Roosevelt said something they really understood. Finland, said he, had met all of its debt. Then they roared. They yelled and they shouted and clapped their hands. Here was a demonstration worthy of the emotional French. The debt, I think, totaled just about $300,000. You would have thought it was the high light of the speech.

It definitely answered, in my opinion, the question of what the present Congress will be.

I would not have you think, however, that there will not be individual instances of initiative, of statesmanship, of courage, of the spirit of do and dare.

As soon as newspapermen entered the gallery they were confronted on the bulletin board by a statement by Mr. Knutson, of Minnesota, Mr. Knutson himself, for release the minute the Congress convened. This meant that promptly at the stroke of noon Mr. Knutson's statement could be flashed to all the world. He recited indignantly what he described as France's effort to "recapture our wine market" when she won't pay her debts.

"Not if I can prevent it," he exclaimed. It was the unequivocal nature of this statement that struck me, no qualification at all, a forthright utterance if ever there was one, a promise limited only by the power of the man.

He seemed to recognize this limit, however, in his next sentence when he said rather futilely: "If I had my way I would prohibit the issuance of passports to France until she had toed the mark." Hot dog, that's telling 'em, Mr. Knutson.

And there, too, was a statement from Mr. Hoidale, also of Minnesota. Said he in his statement:

"Congressman Hoidale came in early this morning. After taking care of telegrams on his desk the Congressman got in touch with high officials of the PWA" concerning some projects he is trying to get for his district, one costing $9,000,000, I believe.

Of course, it's a far cry from the time when Congressmen got in touch with high officials to get seeds for their constituents, but I think the answer to the question of what the present Congress will be is:

Essentially, the same old thing.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Thackeray's Best Novel.

Which is Thackeray's best novel? I know that very many prefer Vanity Fair, but I give my vote for Henry Esmond. With Dickens and Thackeray, both of whom wrote realistic novels with excursions into romance, I think Dickens was at his best in contemporary scenes, while Thackeray was at his best in historical romance. I have never been enthusiastic about A Tale of Two Cities; to my mind, it does not compare with his great works of realism. He was not in his element.

But when Thackeray wrote Henry Esmond, he was inspired. He abandoned his regular custom of publishing the book in monthly numbers; he wrote and produced it as one complete work of art. Who can ever forget the duel in the night or Beatrix descending the staircase or the jealousy of the lady who did not know that she loved Henry or the time when Henry brought the smallpox into the household?

Although the period prescribed in the age of Queen Anne, the late Prof. Lounsbury said that Thackeray's imitative language was innacurate. But it is a story of more passion than the author ever expressed elsewhere.

STREAM LINES.

Experts claim that streamlining of automobiles has caused the 1933 models to use 30 per cent less power in overcoming air resistance than the cars of 1928. This result was obtained after taking tests with model cars at the Bureau of Standards, according to the Los Angeles Times. Models used were from a quarter to a fifteenth the actual size of cars. It was found that at a speed of 60 miles an hour air resistance used 27 horsepower for a 1927 sedan, 26 for a 1928, 18 for 1933 and 8 and 6 for two streamlined models.

Cannon Opens Fight for New U. S. Dry Law

Bishop Wants Congress to Have Authority Over Traffic.

Bishop James Cannon, jr., speaking at a meeting of the National Temperance Council yesterday, advocated the immediate introduction in Congress of a joint resolution calling for another prohibition amendment.

The proposed amendment would give Congress the right to regulate or to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquor.

The bishop told reporters that steps were already being taken to introduce such a resolution, and while he did not expect it to be speedily ratified, he was convinced the country would soon realize that the liquor traffic was a National evil which could only be controlled nationally.

The Virginia clergyman declared that from now on the advocates of repeal were on the defensive and in a state of "utter confusion" as to how to end the "deluge of evils" which repeal had brought.

Insists New Law to Fail.

He characterized the twenty-first amendment as "utterly worthless as a protection to dry territory" and inquired "If the Federal Government could not or would not enforce the eighteenth amendment, how can it be expected to enforce the twenty-first?"

He declared that in many States the saloon had already returned.

"From now on," said the bishop, "the drys will take the offensive in a broadly comprehensive educational and legislative campaign which will become increasingly effective as it becomes evident that the wets can not maintain their campaign pledges to prevent the return of the saloon and to protect dry territory."

Representatives of 33 organizations are attending the Conference of National Associations, which had supported the eighteenth amendment, over which Dr. James A. Crain, of Indianapolis, presided as chairman.

W. C. T. U. Represented.

Principal among the organizations represented are the Women's Christian Temperance Union, whose delegates are Mrs. Ella A. Boole and Mrs. Ida Wise Smith, of Des Moines; the Antisaloon League, represented by Dr. F. Scott McBride, superintendent, and Dr. Ernest Cherrington, director of education; the temperance or reform organizations of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches, the Association of Catholics favoring prohibition and the Sons of Temperance.

A program of structural and functional reorganization of the entire temperance set-up is being discussed as well as amalgamation of some organizations under a recognized head. Plans will be laid to oppose repeal in the ten States which have not yet voted on the twenty-first amendment. A program for retaining constitutional or legislative prohibition in the 29 States having prohibition laws will be prepared.

The National Beer and Liquor Dealers Association will meet today at the Willard Hotel in a two-day session devoted chiefly to opposing excessive liquor taxation. Tomorrow there will be a meeting of the National United Conference for Prohibition. On Sunday the Antisaloon League will meet.

Youth Doomed to Die in Gas Chamber Gets Execution Stay

Colorado Court to Review Case of New Jersey Boy Slayer.

Denver, Jan. 3 (AP).—Walter Reppin, 18, Newark, N. J. youth under sentence to die this week in Colorado's new Lethal gas chamber for the murder of a taxi driver, tonight was cheered by the Colorado Supreme Court's intervention and the chance of a new trial.

The court today ordered the warden at Canon City to stay the execution until further notice.

Reppin was scheduled to die the week ending January 6 for the murder of Vincent Regan, at Colorado Springs, last August.

Will Review Case.

The court granted a motion to review Reppin's case, presented today by David Rosner and Philip Hornbein, of Denver, voluntary attorneys for the youth. The decision made a stay of execution automatic.

Arguing for a new trial and a chance for Reppin to plead not guilty or not guilty by reason of insanity, the attorneys made three chief allegations.

One was that Reppin, as a minor and infant in the eyes of the law, could not have waived his rights by pleading guilty to first degree murder charges.

Another was that the trial judge erred in not instructing the jury to consider both a first and second degree verdict.

Not Mentally Sound.

The third plea was that Reppin is not mentally sound and that the court should have provided for an inquiry to establish whether or not he had sufficient mental responsibility to justify a death sentence.

Gov. E. C. Johnson repeated his statement today that he would not interfere with the sentence given Reppin after making public a letter he received from Mrs. Rose L. Regan, of Colorado Springs, mother of Reppin's victim.

The letter asked for death for Reppin, "not in a spirit of revenge, but in the name of justice."

Mrs. Regan charged that Reppin "carefully planned this murder and was armed with two guns when he lured our son out on a fake call, stole his cab, shot him and left him to die on a lonely road at night."

Lehman Urges Broad Changes In Government

Assembly Hears Plea for "Bold Experimentation" in Rum Control.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 3 (AP).—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman today called on the Legislature to open the way for reduced local government costs by thoroughly reorganizing city, town and county governments.

Carrying on a fight started by former Govs. Alfred E. Smith and Franklin D. Roosevelt against "antiquated" local government, Gov. Lehman outlined his plan at the opening of the 157th session of the Legislature.

Hits Invisible Government.

He declared such reorganization would deal a blow to "invisible government" as well as cut heavily into tax bills. He addressed a joint session of the two houses.

He called for "gold experimentation" in liquor control laws, legislation to permit cities and villages to sell electricity, authority for slum clearance and the building of low-cost homes, strengthening of the milk control law, a four-year term for governor, and reapportionment of legislative and congressional districts.

Most of the message was devoted to a three-fold program of governmental reform, which in brief provides for reorganization of county and town government, revisino of city charters generally throughout the State and revision of the New York City charter.

Foresees Tax Reduction.

The Legislature was asked to avoid "old abuses," but not to curb "the natural unstimulated desire of normal human beings for alcoholic beverages, served in decent surroundings."

Outlining his governmental reform program, Mr. Lehman said:

"My recommendations, while far reaching and affecting every political subdivision of the State, insure to the people of the community involved the right to make the final decision as to the form of government they desire."

He declared enactment of the three proposals "will bring to every taxpayer substantial reductions in local taxation."

Youth's Throat Cut, Uncle Wounded

Robbery Believed Motive in Gas Station Crime.

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—Talmadge Strickland, 19, was found dead with his throat cut in his filling station near here today, and his uncle, Thalton Strickland, beside him on a burning bed unconscious with a long cut in the side of his neck.

Officers expressed the opinion robbers attempted to kill both men and burn the filling station to cover their crime. A purse with $201 in it was found, however, in Talmadge Strickland's pocekt.

William Holder, Raleigh Negro, was taken into custody for questioning.

Army Ordnance Plants Get Improvement Funds

A program of modernizing Army ordnance establishments, including the Aberdeen, Md., plant, will be undertaken with a $2,309,000 allotment from the Public Works Administration, it was announced yesterday. Fifteen plants will be improved.

Land Purchase Fund Allotted

$25,000,000 Program to Reduce Poor Crop Areas Ordered.

Allocation of $25,000 form Public Works funds to buy up poor farm land, to be retired to forest or other noncrop use, was announced last night by Secretary of Interior Ickes.

As reported exclusively by The Washington Post yesterday, this sum will be placed at the disposal of the Surplus Relief Corporation which has broad powers to buy and sell land for the Government.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace estimates that ultimately 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 acres of less profitable farm land thus taken out of cultivation will be turned back to the National domain, or added to Indian reservations or to National forests.

The policy is to put the land-buying policy into effect gradually so as to cause no undue disturbances.

Tabernacle Crime Described to Jury

Pastor Shot Janitor "Like Dog," Says Prosecutor.

Piggot, Ark., Jan. 3 (AP).—Conflicting versions of how J. W. MacMurdo was slain in the Jonesboro Baptist Tabernacle by the Rev. Dale S. Crowley were given a jury today at Crowley's trial on a murder charge.

MacMurdo, aged janitor of the tabernacle for the faction of Evangelist Joe Jeffers, was declared by Prosecutor Denver Dudley to have been "shot like a dog" by the 34-year-old minister.

Seal B. Harrison, chief defense attorney, contended Crowley fired from a reclining position. MacMurdo had shot at Crowley, the lawyer asserted, after Crowley, just recognized by a court order as the legal pastor, ordered the janitor to leave.

NEW YORKER'S RECOLLECTION OF NEW YEAR'S EVE.

'Twas a dizzy eve—
I enjoyed each hour;
I remember climbing the Chrysler Tow'r.

I recall a waltz
With J. P. Morgan
And a walk downtown
With the Roxy organ.

I recall a lot
Of lily gilding
And a silent toast
To the Woolworth Building.

I remember a swim
From the Astor bar
To the library
With a shooting star.

And I went from there
To the New York zoo
And I bought a drink
For a friendly gnu.

I distinctly recall
That an elderly beadle
And I shinned up
Cleopatra's Needle.

But I'm here to wage
An unending war
If you say I slept
In the reservoir.

No End of Books

Best Books on Games

At the head of any list of books which will tell you how to beguile yourself or your friends, on a rainy afternoon or throughout the length of an evening party, must stand "The Week-End Book," which was first printed by Lincoln MacVeagh in 1924, the latest edition issued in 1930 by Random House, price $2.50. A lot of very nice people think it the pleasantest book ever published. It is certainly one of the most charming. For in addition to printing an assortment of Great Poems, Hate Poems, State Poems, and poems on the Zoo, songs, advices on food, and First Aid in Divers Crises—all of which are highly amusing and memorable, it has a section on Play which here concerns us. In dialogue form a number of sprightly people relate their favorite ways of passing an hour, from Dumbo-Crambo to Up-Jenkyns and back to Tishy-Toshy, all of which are quite as much fun as they sound. (Though Alexander Woollcott would not care for these names.) Also there are a number of problems to try on your friends who are perspicuity-proud. Vera Mendal and Francis Meynell did the general editing. After that feat, the sins of this life ought to be forgiven them.

The one sound, steady and complete book on games is "Foster's Complete Hoyle," by R. F. Foster (Stokes, 1927—though there must be later editions—$3.50 in the regular binding and $1 in paper). All the card games brom bezique to yerlash, as well as chess, checkers, dominoes, billiards, bowling, and a neat little chapter on probabilities, are included in this exhaustive book. No fuss and feathers, just the plain rules. But it's very useful when your partner begins to wax individualistic over Russian bank.

If you take card strategy seriously and work over its problems, you'll find no general book quite so interesting as Emanuel Lasker's "Encyclopedia of Games: volume I: Card Strategy" (Dutton, 1929, $3.50). The well-known chess champion not only tells you how to play card games, but how to play them conscientiously well. He takes up the subject by theoretical principles, by history, and then by families of games — vingt-et-un, euchre, poker, whist, skat bezique, cassino, and all their derivatives. Excellent for the solid and thoughtful player.

Turning the less usual and more ingenious games for parties, two authors give you about all you could ask for. In partnership, Edward Longstreth and Leonard T. Holton wrote "What'll We Do Now?" (Simon & Schuster, 1928, $1.90), which presents the favorite games of a number of famous people. Heywood Broun likes "Essay and Soapbox," Rube Goldberg likes "Captains of Industry," and Robert Benchley likes "Words Without Song," to mention only a handful. The book is very funnily illustrated and the games are hilarious. The same pair of authors in 1930 gave us "What'll We Do Next?" (Reilly & Lee, $1.25), full of an entirely new array of ice-breakers for parties. Both books are worth their weight in gold to any hostess.

Other books for a party are "Everyday Games Book," by V. C. Alexander (Lippincott, 1930, $1.50), rather on the children's side, but adults are known to enjoy what the book suggests; "The Happy Party Book," by Ethel Owen (Abingdon Press, 1929, $1), to which the same remark, and "Indoor and Community Games," by Sid G. Hedges (Lippincott, 1933), full of braintest, boisterous agility, musical and spectator games. The variety these offer is somewhat appalling.

When there are only two people to play, look up "Games for Two," by Mrs. Prescott Warren (Harcourt Brace, 1931, $1.50). This describes everything from honey-moon bridge to backgammon, camelot and anagrams. Also for the twosome is the lively "Tete-a-Tete Book," by Lassiter Wren (Doubleday Doran, 1930, $2). Printed so that the two opponents may read it at the same time, it gives a number of contests ranging from the identification of trade-marks to the translation of the Broadway slang on a page of "Variety." I wanted to sit down at once with a partner over this book.

• • • •

Then we have the specialties, a book to a game. When it appeared, "Speculation," by A. Poole and W. J. Buckitt (Farrar & Rinehart, 1929, $1.35), must have been great fun. If the topic is not too deeply painful, you will like it now. You start with $10,000, have 16 stocks to buy and sell, and as successive pages of the book report news events and varying quotations you try to swell your pile to $15,000 in a week's time.

"Who's This?" by Frank P. Foster (Century, 1933), gives 151 biographies, minus the name, of such people as Buffalo Bill and Michael Angelo. Read aloud to a party, the players guess the person suggested.

For "murder" devotees, though the flair has somewhat waned, there's "Murder in Your Home," by Elizabeth Cobb (Irvin's daughter) and Margaret Case Morgan (Long & Smith, 1932, $1.50). The lines for 20 dramatized murders are given, and these are to be acted out and solved after dinner. The properties are common in any house, and the clews are subtle enough to please the most exacting detective story fan.

Simon & Schuster have got out a number of play-books recently. Among them are "Snap Judgment" ($1), by Jerome Myers and Herbert Marks, in which you identify photographs of front-page figures, and "Mathemagic" ($1.75), by Royal V. Heath, full of tricks with numbers and stunts for lightning calculators. At a party the other night I won at "Snap Judgment," so, of course, it holds a place in my heart. But both are huge fun.

But there's no more space in which to mention cross-word puzzles. "Are You a Genius?" and, incidentally, books on bridge.

Leaps to Death

Harris & Ewing.

COMMANDER ROGERT H. SKELTON, former aid to Assistant Secretary of the Navy Jahncke, who leaped to his death from his room at the Naval Hospital yesterday.

Com. Skelton, Jahncke Aid, In Death Leap

Naval Officer Leaves Note, Then Jumps From Hospital.

After addressing a note in which he left his estate to his sister, Mrs. Cathryn Spangler, of Bound Brook, N. J., Commander Robert H. Skelton, once naval aid to former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ernest Jahncke, leaped to his death from his sick room on the second floor of the Naval Hospital early yesterday.

After conferring with a naval board of inquiry, Acting Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide several hours later.

Ill Since November.

Commander Skelton, 44, a native of Milwaukee, had been an inmate of the hospital since November. He was admitted following a nervous breakdown, according to authorities.

Commander Skelton was graduated by the Naval Academy. Early in his career he served aboard the U. S. S. Colorado, and later the U. S. S. Preble.

He was promoted to engineering officer on the U. S. S. Denver in 1916, and served aboard this ship during the World War. After doing a tour of duty on the U. S. S. Maine, he was transferred to the Mare Island Navy Yard, where he was placed in command.

Next he became ranking officer on the U. S. S. Gamble and the U. S. S. Gillis. In 1922 he became executive officer aboard the U. S. S. Kanawha. He served aboard the U. S. S. Arizona and U. S. S. New Mexico as navigator on the latter.

Aid Here in 1929.

Commander Skelton came here as aid to Jahncke in 1929. His next post was that of aid and flag secretary on the staff of the commander of the United States Fleet, and he then took command of the U. S. S. Buchanan, returning to Washington for duty with the Bureau of Navigation in March, 1932.

No one at the hospital saw Commander Skelton's leap. His body was found on the stairway of a concrete abutment. Police were not notified immediately.

Only his sister survives him.

Engineers Approve Norfolk Project

$100,000 River Extension Advised to Congress.

Congress received yesterday from Army engineers a recommendation that the channel in the Southern Branch of the Elizabeth River, at Norfolk Harbor, Va., be extended 2,500 feet above the Norfolk & Western Railroad bridge at a cost of $100,000, the Associated Press says.

The recommendation, signed by Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown, until recently chief of Army engineers, favored extension of a 25-foot depth with a minimum width of 200 feet in the river to the point designated. The report said it would cost $5,000 annually to maintain the project.

A turning basin 500 feet square on the river was also recommended.

Dairymen Flay Lax Activities Of Association

Confidence in Md.-Va. Body Lost, Say Speakers at Frederick.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Sharp criticism was directed at the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association by member speakers last night at a meeting of 125 dairymen at Adamstown.

The meeting was called to discuss the proposed marketing agrement of the association with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, with special reference to the price producers shall receive for class 2 milk.

Eric C. Biser, one of the Frederick County directors of the association, presided. Following remarks by W. H. Renn, Adamstown, an association shipper, Richard Farr, Fairfax County, Va., the next speaker, said dairymen of Fairfax County had lost confidence in the management of the association for failure to obtain better prices for milk.

Other Criticism Heard.

Dr. E. H. Marstetta, of Manassas, Va., said dairymen of Prince William County, Va., likewise had lost confidence in the management of the association because of its lack of interest in behalf of members in dealing with the Walker Hill Dairy situation in Washington.

Former Senator J. L. Bristow, Fairfax County, Va., a director of the association, recommended that class 1 and class 2 milk be combined so shippers could obtain a better price than now paid for class 1, selling at 26 cents per gallon delivered in Washington and 22 cents per gallon delivered at receiving stations in this city and Walkersville.

Official Defends It.

John McGill, secretary-treasurer and manager, defended the policies of the association. He declared conflicting statements were largely responsible for a misunderstanding between members and the association. I. W. Heaps, manager of the Eastern States Milk Marketing Association, attended the meeting but did not speak.

At the conclusion of the discussion, two resolutions were adopted. One called for appointment of a committee to appear before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and request that all class 2 milk sold for fluid consumption be included as class 1, and that a committee also request the Adjustment Administration to retain the three cents differential between receiving station shippers and those who ship will appoint the committees within direct to Washington. Mr. Biser the next few days.

So round, so firm, so fully packed

—no loose ends to spill out or cling to lips

On every fine tobacco plant there are only a few leaves that we buy for Lucky Strike. Not the top leaves—because they are under-developed. Not the bottom leaves—because those are inferior in quality. We select only the center leaves—because the center leaves are the mildest and fully ripe for perfect smoking. Only the center leaves are used in making Luckies—so round, so firm, so fully packed—free from loose ends that spill out, that cling to lips. Is it any wonder Luckies are mild and smooth? And remember, "It's toasted"—for throat protection—for finer taste.

Novelties in Dinner Dresses.

Long tunics have the preference for smart afternoon wear, for cocktail and dinner parties, but the classical dinner gown is also very popular. It is worn very long, covering the ankle and, although it usually has a wide decollete at the back, the front very often shows long sleeves and high neckline. Fur trimmings are very much in evidence with this sort of dress.

National Commission's Report Attacks Fat Reducing Agents
The Commission found that probably more advertising was done to sell fat-reducing compounds or agents than for any other treatment for human ills or defects.
"According to the medical profession," the Commission said, "there is, aside from powerful and dangerous drugs, no competent method known for reducing fat except limited and proper diet, combined with proper exercise."

Women's Spats Keep Ankles Snug and Trim

They're in Three Shades, Plus White for Wear With Patent Leather.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Assiduous shoppers who "keep going" in the rain, snow, sleet, or shine, find it necessary to garb themselves for full protection against the elements. Any piece of wearing apparel which can contribute both to their comfort and appearance should find favor. Women's spats, for instance. A local store has some which fit snugly around the ankles and give a dapper air to the most ordinary kind of shoes.

These spats are cut for trim ankles and small feet. A small elastic band fits under the arch of the shoe, and two buttons clasp up the side. They come in three shades, gray for black or gray shoes, faun for brown or tan, and white for shiny patent leathers.

Pencils to have any claim to fame must possess some extraordinary quality. An E street store has some which are giants in a large way. They have leads which are the size of the usual pencil, and erasers like small rubber balls. So far no one has assigned a definite use to them, but everybody agrees they're fun to have around.

This cabinet is about a foot square, made from light wood heavily lacquered in black and red. Two drawers pull out at the top. Immediately beneath them cabinet doors fold back and disclose two more drawers.

The use? One of the most convenient pieces in the world for holding cards and cigarettes. Or if used in the boudoir it's splendid for jewelry.

Dressy curtains for hallways, bathrooms, kitchens and dinettes are pretty and dainty, we acknowledge, but they're far from economical. Before a season is over we have practically paid for them twice with laundry bills. But take a pair of tailored curtains, devoid of useless furbelows and they can be put through the washing machine every month or so with no extra expense.

A shop on G street is featuring some marquisettes this week priced at $1. They have a one-inch hem on both sides and a three-inch hem at the bottom. Available in white, cream or ecru, with Priscilla tops.

Salt and pepper shakers designed to look like an unknown variety of plums have just arrived on F street. Round composition balls of red, white and black have an opening at one side by which they can be filled. Small holes on the other side qualify them as shakers. A short silver stem, with two silver leaves, makes a perfect handle.

A certain gift department in a downtown store looked, at a casual glance, for all the world like a pet shop. A table, the first thing to meet the gaze, was covered with a variety of cats, most of them black and white. At first they seemed to be fast asleep. All this was the impression of a single second. It was almost immediately apparent that these real looking creations were imitation kittens. They were perfect in all details. A tiny black one had large amber eyes, curling white whiskers, and a pink snubby nose.

The three musketeers aren't what they used to be. They're here now, neatly carved from wood, vividly painted, designed for uses which would have set their namesakes to shame—maybe.

With wide open mouths they stand on a pedestal looking like three street singers. The first one is a short little fellow with a bottle under his arm. Remove his head and find a bottle opener. The second is the tallest of the three. A derby sits on the back of his head, and he has a guitar in his hands. Off comes his head, and up comes a corkscrew. The third musketeer is very, very short, and even a little bit dumpy. His head is held on by a long cork serving as his neck.

The set entire has a definite use, and a decidedly novel and ornamental value.

This cold weather has been good for the scarf business. No matter how heavy a coat, we can't feel insured against chilling drafts without the protection of a warm wooly scarf high around our throats.

An F street store has some new ones hand-woven to look somewhat like a wool mesh. They're soft and extremely warm.

One of the most attractive collar sets to take its place in the spring line-up is made of yellow pique. The front of it falls down over the frock giving the effect of a short vestee. A small ruffle around the edges gives it an additional feminine touch.

January sales in the realm of china are particularly intriguing this year. A local gift shop is selling Pickard china, coated with a 22-carat gold inlay at a 40 per cent discount.

Just as silver is always in good taste for wedding gifts, so is very excellent china. There's a splendid choice here ranging from a large cake plate, coffee sets, cups and saucers, bon-bon dishes, to little sandwich plates, salt cellars and nut dishes.

First Train Hostess Puts Revelry Into Travel

Mrs. Jerry Keating Busy Organizing Dancing And Games.

By Katherine Smith.

A couple hurry down the long aisle of a Pullman car. They sway precariously through the door labeled "Claribelle" into the one called "Rosebud"—down another long aisle and into the car marked "Lake Champlain." Finally, after a series of lurches and plunges, they enter the car next to the end.

And there they hear the subtle lilting strains of Hawaiian guitars, laughter and "My dear, it was my ace!"

A smiling hostess steps forward and graciously introduces them to two other passengers. She arranges a table of bridge. Two of three couples are dancing, others sit at the end of the car and smoke or chat. A young man and girl bend over a table frowning at a stubborn jigsaw puzzle.

The first "Florida Special" to carry a recreation car with hostess now runs regularly between New York, Washington and Miami. Mrs. Jerry Keating is the first hostess to travel on the Atlantic Coast Lines. She explained her duties last night to the reporter while the photographer was setting up his camera.

"I have to introduce people and see they are comfortable and happy," she said. Often folks traveling are lonely and would like to meet congenial people about them.

"We have bridge tournaments, and the top scores are awarded a silver cup. The cup is just the right size to hold a good drink of rye, but the trouble is," she smiled mischievously, "they are presented empty.

"You see, we are directly in competition with the boats. They have entertainment, dancing, games, musicales and what not, and now the trains have them as well. There are five of us hostesses under the direction of a supervisory hostess. We are all trained in being gracious and tactful—it's quite a job making the public happy.

"The trains carry orchestras every night—we have two American orchestras, two Hawaiian and one Mexican. They give musicals each day, and it is surprising how quickly the time passes when there is music.

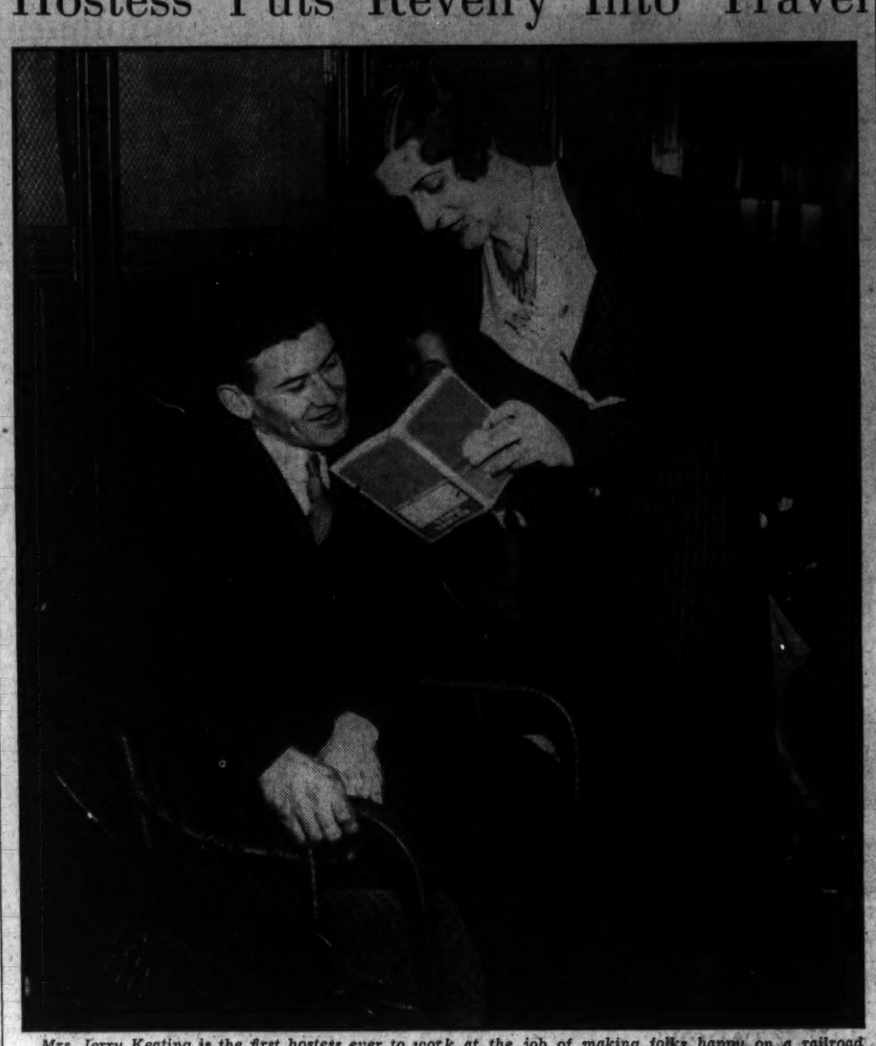
"This is the first time that trains will regularly run a recreation car. Other trains have carried them on anniversaries or for special functions, but these cars are permanent arrangements. We want to lengthen the passengers' vacations by increasing their playtime."

"Don't talk about getting trainsick! I hope I won't, for I haven't time!"

"But it's fun to travel. I get a lot of amusement out of the names of the cars. 'Claribelle'—ridiculous, isn't it? I understand that they have run out of names and are starting to call the cars after the lakes—Erie, George and the rest. They have mythical and botanical, and historical and personal names—now they will have to go geographic.

"Sometimes they name the engines too. If an engineer runs a locomotive, say, 35 years, they put his name on the outside of the cab.

A warning jiggle told the reporter that she had better get out, or go to Richmond. Out she got, there was waving of hands, and "good-bys" and with a spasmodic quiver the train chug-chugged down the track, bound for the summer time of Florida."



Mrs. Jerry Keating is the first hostess ever to work at the job of making folks happy on a railroad train. She introduces travelers and organizes dances and games. It's fun, she says.

How to Keep Well

Digging Into Scurvy.

Should further research work confirm recent discoveries we may soon know much more than we do now about measures for the prevention and cure of scurvy. These researches seem to show that a certain organic acid, the name of which is still a matter of some dispute, is the substance which prevents and cures scurvy. A diet that prevents this disease is rich in this acid and one which causes it is poor in the element. Furthermore, a reasonably simple and fairly accurate laboratory test, by which the presence of this acid in various foodstuffs can be shown and the amount of it determined, has been devised and is being given trial.

Laboratory tests indicate that foods are effective in preventing scurvy in close relation to their content of this acid. The proof is found in the results from feeding animals as well as test tube determinations. The two run just about parallel.

Analyses of certain foods for this substance give results that will surprise many. We agree that the Eskimo, who gets no fruits and no vegetables except a little moss, escapes scurvy because when he eats an animal he eats organs and all. Dr. Cook saved the members of an American Antarctic expedition from scurvy by having them eat penguins—all but the feathers. These analyses show that some of the internal organs of animals are richer than orange juice in the antiscorbutic principle. The adrenal gland appears to lead all the rest, though liver contains a good deal of it.

Of the various vegetables and fruits, horseradish appears to be much the best source of scurvy preventive. In one set of analyses from British sources cabbage ranked next. In approximate figures some others ranked about as follows. Water cress; orange, lemon and grapefruit juices, about on a par, came second; some specimens of apple peel were in this very rich group, though most apple peel ranked below; pineapple juice came next, and then tomato juice; banana, potato, rhubarb, grapes, carrots, peach juice and apple pulp followed. Milk was about in the peach juice and apple pulp class. Eggs and oats had practically none at all.

What Today Means

"Capricorn."

If January 4 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 3 to 6 p. m. The danger periods are from 5 to 6:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 8 to 10 p. m.

If you were born on January 4, you are of a very contradictory character, in fact it may be said you possess a dual personality. You are almost penurious when a comparatively small amount of money is involved, and you will spend an enormous amount of energy haggling oved a few cents. On the other hand, if you wish to indulge yourself in anything, or create a favorable impression on someone you are "playing up to," you spend money with a lavish hand. You will be very cautious in business transactions, but extremely indiscreet, in love affairs.

The child born on this date will develop a most acquisitive disposition, and when able to talk will be a regular little chatter-box. You may as well prepare yourself to be a walking encyclopedia, for your youngster will keep you busy trying to answer questions. This will be only a passing period the child will go through, for as it grows older it will become a rather thoughtful, analytical individual, who will think twice before asking or answering questions.

If you were born on January 4 and of the female sex, you are decidedly "set" in your ways and have so much determination that it is almost impossible for any one to influence you, if you once decide on a certain plan of action. You are the type that the average person will never suspect of being unduly interested in men. However, you have such an amount of suppressed emotions, it will be very difficult but well for you to control it, as you are going to be thrown in dangerously close contact with men who will not hesitate to take advantage of your emotionalism, if you allow them to suspect its existence.

Men born on January 4 are studious and will excel in the educational or scientific field. If born on this date, you are the type of man that will get a great deal of pleasure out of working incessantly, business being your main obsession. You will have some setbacks, but possessing tenacity of will, you will ultimately climb the ladder of success.

Successful people born on January 4:

Roger Wolcott, author and soldier.
Aaron Burr, educator.
Walter Williamson, physician.
Edward P. Dutton, publisher.
Sidney A. Norton, chemist.

Two-Piece Dresses Are Here for Sports Wear, And They Go in for the Gaudiest Colorings

New York, Jan. 3—Folk who aren't going South for sunshine or North for winter sports needn't feel that all the fun of choosing new clothes belongs to those who are. New midwinter sports dresses for stay-at-homes—and they don't have to be used just for sports wear, either—have taken a big slice of the gay color and details which are so intriguing in going-away clothes.

If you envy your South-bound friend her new dresses in that light, rusty orange called bittersweet, in bright yellowish green, in gold or powder blue or aqua, pop into one yourself, made of wool crepe or a soft knit rabbit wool.

And if you are jealous of the gay plaids and checked shirts combined with dark trousers and skirts that fill North-bound wardrobes, choose a new midwinter wool with dark skirt and top of bright or pastel color, or plaid, check or stripe.

For these are the things that are brightening up smart wardrobes right now. And most of these dresses are two-piece, which makes them practical, since the skirt can be used with different tops.

They're quite tailored, but not too mannish. Skirts are slim with some fullness in kick or box pleats.

Styles of Tops.

Tops look like shirtwaists (a favorite Southland fashion) or like jackets or like sweaters. And these last are usually in knitted fabrics.

Some of them are made entirely of closely knitted zephyr wools and in these you'll find very gay striped or checked tops.

Others are of wool crepe . . . plain or one of the many novelty weaves. Still others in hairy knitted fabrics, and these are the ones you'll find in the pastels.

Then there are ribbed knits in all one color or with the blouse of one color and skirt of another. And diagonal plaid skirts sometimes have blouses in a plain color matching one of the colors in the plaid.

Novel Fastenings.

But it isn't only color which makes these dresses so fascinating. They're full of novel fastenings, such as door hook effects, old-fashioned hook shoe lacings, regular hooks-and-eyes on a grand scale, tricky clips and stud fasteners.

There are scarf and muffler necklines, standing mandarin collars, rever collars, patch pockets—certainly enough interesting details to satisfy anyone's desire for a change.

Novel Traveling Bag.

An intriguing travel bag is being displayed by Katherine Hepburn. It is made of calf, is about 10 inches long and has the lines of a squat satchel. When empty, it collapses and may be stowed away in a small space. An inside moire purse is large enough to be used as a dress bag.

Sport dresses of the types described are available in Washington in all the better class shops.

The Opening Hand.

Next to the pass the Opening bid of one is the most important call in Contract Bridge. It is also the ideal bid. Only in the rarest cases is the best final bid apparent from the start, and usually a tremendous amount of information must be exchanged before it is possible to determine the best choice of contracts from the point of view of the combined hands of the partnership. Hence the necessity for economy of bids, which, like a precious code language, must be highly concentrated.

Every bid made must open up a double view of the hand, for there are two types of winning cards upon which it may be based. First are the honor-tricks, for the string of small trumps which are of great value as the player's own trump bid become worthless against the opponents' bids in support of some other bid made by partner. An Opening bid is a leap in the dark, and honor-tricks are liquid values. If partner can expect a minimum number of them from the Opening bidder, he is then in a position to gauge how far the opponents can go in their bidding. The fact that 2½ honor-tricks approximate a hand which is a Queen better than each player's average share of an Ace, a King, a Queen and a Knave gives us a line of demarcation between an Opening bid and the original pass.

Of equal importance are the distributional or low-card values, and exact information on suit lengths must be exchanged between partners for the selection of the best bid. This information is conveyed by giving a definite minimum length and strength for biddable and rebiddable suits, and by a system of trump supports and denials.

The scientific requirements for Opening suit bids of one in the Culbertson System are so delicately adjusted—to be fitted for expert play—that they offer the greatest defense compatible with safety, and as a matter of deliberate policy take into account the possibility of occasional loss. Since these requirements are the result of years of research and practical tests, the reader is urged to adhere to them—but not without imagination. Unfortunately many players, upon their own initiative, introduce radical variations in these requirements, not realizing that an arbitrary change, particularly upward, will surely lead to serious loss. The theory of Opening bids of one offers exceptional difficulties because the very occasional losses due to light, though sound, Opening bids are glaring on the score pad, while the considerable gains accruing from the tactics of aggressive defense are generally invisible. One can not become a winning player unless one has learned defensive bidding, and of all defensive bids an Opening one-bid in a suit is the best.

Opening trump bids of one show:

Minimum honor strength in the hand: At least 2½ honor-tricks distributed in two suits.

Minimum length in the suit: Four cards.

Minimum honor strength in the suit:

1. If the Opening bid of one is made on a four-card suit it must ordinarily be headed by 1½ honor-tricks, as A Q 3 2, A J 10 2 or K Q J 2. In order to limit further the inherent disadvantage of the Opening notrump, the following suits should be regarded as biddable: A J 9 2, K Q 3 2 or Q J 10 2 in either majors or minors and in addition K J 3 2 in minor suits. These shaded suits have been found to be quite safe with a partner who is not wholly imaginative, but, of course, a shaded biddable suit should not be bid when the hand itself is a minimum. The weakness of the shaded suit should be safeguarded by some added value above the minimum biddable strength of the hand—in all about 3 to 3½ honor-tricks.

2. If the Opening suit bid of one is made on a five-card suit, it can be headed by only ½ honor-trick, as K 8 7 6 2 or Q J 5 4 3. Occasionally a five-card suit as weak as Q 10 4 3 2, J 10 4 3 2 or even less may be bid, especially to avoid opening the bidding with one notrump.

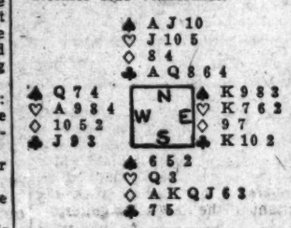
3. If a six-card suit is bid, it can be headed by any card, as Spades 10 9 6 5 4 3.

The requirement of 2½ honor-tricks is flexible in the sense that it is slightly shaded upward or even downward from a "plus" value to ½ honor-trick.

Tomorrow's Hand.

What should be the bidding by North and South and what the final contract on the hand below?

North, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

The Family Marketer

Gleaming Food Packages Reveal the Grocer as an Artful Fellow.

The Marketer's mother has been buying the same coffee for years and years, and the Marketer can vouch for it—it is really good coffee. It is put up by a grocer here in town and costs only 25 cents a pound. Tea put up by the same grocer is 60 cents. The Marketer went up to the store this morning, and the aroma of freshly ground coffee permeated the place. Nothing smells better than good coffee freshly ground.

There are jars of prepared carrots, turnips, peas and string beans (all in the same glass container) for 40 cents. There are jars of these vegetables packed separately for the same price. They are packed in Belgium, and look beautiful and jewel-like with all their delicate, glowing colors.

The Marketer asked the clerk what is wild bramble jelly? He explained that it is made of wild blackberries, raspberries and such. A little squat jar of the jelly is 40 cents.

Pickled Raisins.

Ever eat pickled raisins? They are sweet-pickled and delicious and cost 40 cents a jar. Pickled strawberries are the same price.

And the marmalades! The Marketer's mouth watered even though it was past breakfast time. Red currant marmalade or blackberry marmalade is 35 cents. Orange marmalade in earthenware crocks is the same price.

Green gage jam, which is really like green plum jam, is 23 cents a jar.

Corn relish, made with peppers, pickles and all the relish ingredients is 25 cents a jar. It is a novelty that will dress up any dinner.

You can buy stuffed or unstuffed olives packed in a glass beer mug for 19 cents. If you buy enough of them you'll be all ready for your next beer party. Nothing like buying your table settings with your food, thinks the Marketer. She has seen little glasses filled with cheese spreads. The glasses are the size that you get full of tomato juice in a restaurant, and are striped around the top with a red and blue band. Why not get a set of six? You'll have your cheese and some glassware besides.

Food Baskets for Gifts.

One store will put up baskets of foods for anywhere from a dollar up. The baskets contain little bottles of grapejuice, jars of jams and jellies, rosy Delicious apples, a bunch of grapes, some slender bars of chocolate and any frivolity that you may desire. They would make splendid gifts for convalescents—or farewell baskets for travelers. The store knows how to make them look appetizing, too, because a young lady was preparing a couple when the Marketer was there.

Particularly grand cooked hams are perfect for pickup suppers. One grocer sells them for 85 cents a pound. This might seem extravagant, but the excellent quality and the skillful preparation of them make them worth the price. They are ready to slice and serve.

One delightful way to serve sliced ham is in the form of cornucopias. Take a slice of the ham and roll it diagonally so that one side is open and the other closed. Fill the inside of the cornucopia with sprigs of parsley or the leaves of celery hearts. These cornucopias can be served as a main course filled with potato or vegetable salad. An individual serving on water cress or lettuce leaves makes an attractive dish.

Teacher Scores City's Mothers For Neglect

Miss La Salle Says Frivolous Mothers Have Problem Children.

By Elizabeth Young.

Many thousands of Washington parents, without the excuse of poverty, fail to provide their children with a "home," in the true sense of the word.

And that failure, a Washington woman educator declared yesterday, is the reason for those thousands of "problem children" whose little, warped personalities the public schools of the Capital are so valiantly struggling to set straight.

"Children of 7 and 8 carry their own latch key, going home to houses and apartments with no one to welcome them and none to supervise them. They have no home, if by home we mean a place affording guidance, control and protection for them. What else can result but a problem child?'" said Jessie La Salle, an assistant superintendent of the District schools.

"Children have an instinctive need for activity. Their only expression is through doing things. Fortunate are those whose work and play is supervised in the home. They develop naturally, happy and contented, and give us little trouble.

Mothers Are to Blame.

"But children whose activities are circumscribed, limited and suppressed by lack of equipment, little personal interest and no play space, develop problems of discipline, deportment and the like.

"The desire to manipulate and handle things, to putter about in a make-believe, grown-up world, is as natural to a child as breathing. But how many mothers today spend any time cutting out paper dolls with their daughters, teaching them how to sew or to paint? How many fathers help their sons build bird houses, dog houses, or chicken coops, as they did in our day?

"By far the greater percentage of elementary school children in Washington have mothers who are working; many of them, no doubt, from necessity; others from choice. Those mothers who are not working are playing bridge or otherwise diverting themselves.

"The old-fashioned home, with its system of chores, was one of the best methods ever devised for training in responsibility, punctuality and service. Such habits are necessary in developing an integrated personality in any child, and for rounding out his early social experience.

"Nowadays, parents don't seem to bother about chores, and especially they fail in demanding punctuality. They have no idea of getting their children to school on time, nor anywhere else. Instead of providing their sons and daughters with creative play, they give them passive entertainment, like the movies.

Schools Meet Problem.

"Denied legitimate means of self-expression, young boys and girls seek it in dangerous ways and on the streets.

"But our Washington schools are trying to make up to such children what they miss in the home. They are given chores in the schoolroom, watering plants, feeding the fish, cleaning erasers. They elect their own little officers and divide their work.

"In facing the problem of the neglected, maladjusted child, our schools are setting up research departments to measure the intellectual capacity of the individual and treat them accordingly.

"But here again the average parent is a stumbling block. Most of them object to having their child catalogued as 'different.' And many of them seem more concerned as to whether his scholastic marks are high, than if he is honorable, honest and dependable.

"Several factors enter into the making of the 'problem child.' Lack of training caused by poor home background and careless parents, or by broken homes or working mothers; lack of school adjustment, where the school is without funds to provide facilities for working with unhappy, irritable, maladjusted children; and bad environmental conditions, where the community fails to provide adequate play space and play equipment.

Funds Lacking.

"But nearly all of these could be overcome by the eternal vigilance of interested parents, cooperating with the schools.

"Unfortunately, schools have been greatly handicapped since the depression in meeting the needs of such children. Their principal salvation lies in arousing their play instinct, in music, art or manual training. These are the departments first eliminated when a revised budget becomes necessary."

The Washington public school system, however shows a higher percentage of success in working with such children than many schools throughout the country.

Since 1923, Miss La Salle has been head of the Educational Research Division of the District school system, which analyzes the causes of "problem children's" behavior, and applies schoolroom remedies.

Miss La Salle, who was educated at the Chicago Kindergarden College, Oberlin College and Western Reserve, in Ohio, and Columbia University, was for many years professorial lecturer at Columbia and other leading Eastern universities before she took over her present work with maladjusted children in Washington.

Ladies on Floor of House, First Lady in the Gallery, Make Congress Opening Colorful

Mrs. Roosevelt Sees Her Former Bridesmaid Take the Oath.

By Martha Dalrymple.

The ladies of Congress played their parts colorfully in yesterday's big show on Capitol Hill.

While the feminine legislators lent a spot of color to the floor of the House during the joint session of the House and Senate, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, flanked by members of her family, took the spotlight in the Executive gallery.

It was a homely note the First Lady gave to the scene as she divided her attention between her President husband addressing the world from the rostrum and her very active young granddaughter, little Sistie Dall, who witnessed the proceedings from her grandmother's lap.

Mrs. Roosevelt, as always, was sublimely unconscious as she entered the reserved gallery ten minutes before the President arrived to make his address. The galleries were crowded and the floor of the House was more than half full.

Applaud Mrs. Roosevelt.

There was a spontaneous burst of applause as the President's wife arrived, helping to guide young Sistie and Buzzie down the steep steps leading to their reserved seats. Mrs. Roosevelt looked about her quickly to see what was happening that caused it. She never seemed to realize that it was for her.

Buzzie, the very young brother of Sistie, enjoyed the performance from the vantage point of his nurse's lap. The two youngsters, evidently entranced with their grandfather's public appearance, joined lustily in all the applause.

At one point Buzzie's enthusiasm was so lusty he came near to being lost over the gallery ledge.

Interest on the floor of the House centered on the gray-haired, gracious Isabella Greenway, who took her oath of office as the Representative from Arizona. Mrs. Roosevelt's presence was due as much to this event as to her husband's address, for Mrs. Greenway back in 1905 was Eleanor Roosevelt's bridesmaid when she became the wife of Franklin Roosevelt. For 30 years the two women have been close friends.

Mrs. Clarke Sworn In.

Mrs. Marian W. Clarke, widow of former Representative John D. Clarke, of New York, was the only other woman sworn in at the opening session. She assumed the seat left vacant by her husband's death in October.

Mrs. Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, one of the old-timers, spent a long time greeting old friends before she finally took her seat beside Mrs. Greenway. Her severe black was relieved only by an orchid pinned on her shoulder. She looked serenely upon the scene that has become an old story to her, while Mrs. Greenway's excitement was patent.

The dean of the feminine corps, white-haired Mrs. Florence P. Kahn, of California, who has been in the House since 1925, found difficulty pushing through insistent friends who wanted to say hello.

Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, the slim, pretty member from Massachusetts, brightened her corner with her usual sleek black frock and dazzling white gardenia. Mrs. Rogers promised that she was going to resume her fight for war veterans, whose consistent friend she has been.

After Mrs. Roosevelt, attention in the gallery was centered on Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of a past President, widow of a Speaker of the House, and distant cousin of the current President.

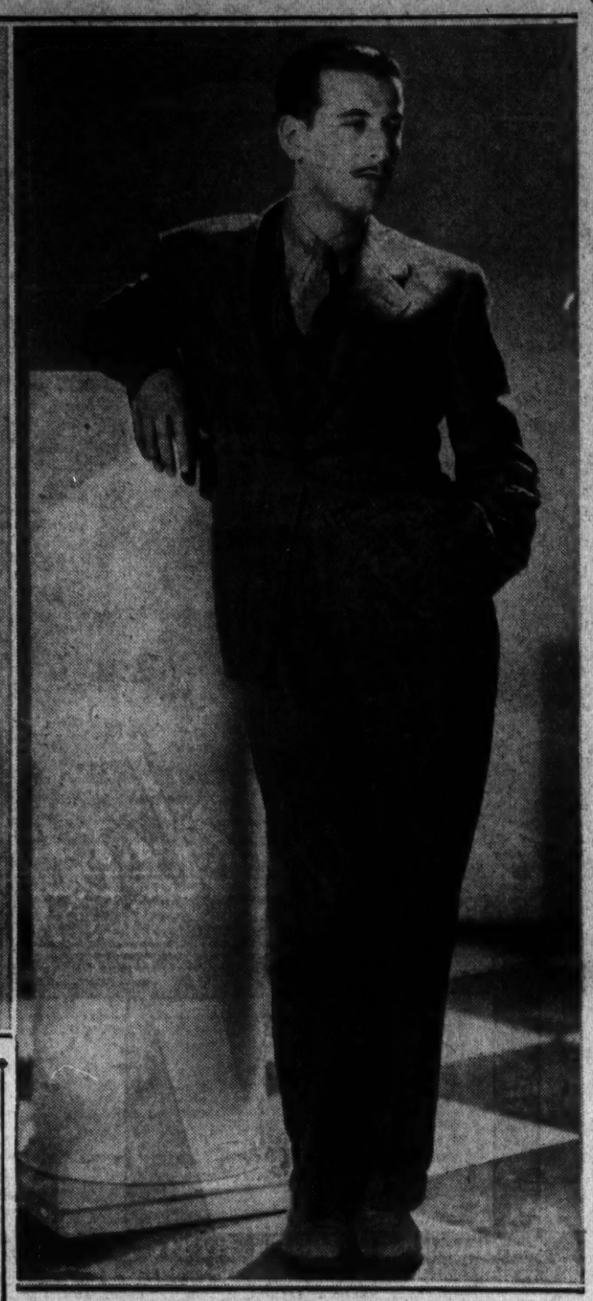
For years "Princess Alice" has been one of the Capital's most consistent gallery fans, but yesterday even she had difficulty finding a ticket of admission. Mrs. Henry T. Rainey, wife of the Speaker, finally came to her aid with the precious pasteboard, happy to share the honors in her gallery with a former Speaker's wife. Mrs. Longworth, dressed in what she herself termed "serviceable" blue outfit, remained throughout the entire session.

One of the most thrilled of all the women was little Mrs. Joseph P. Monaghan, of Butte, Mont. She is a bride of less than a week, and as she sat beside her husband, Representative Monaghan, the "baby" of the House, she gave every evidence of being well pleased with her new matrimonial status. There was quite a bit of hand-holding, covert and overt, between their two chairs.

Sistie and Buzzie Dall Enjoy "Mr. President" In Public.

A Film Fez That Tickled a Continent

The fez fad which swept the country several months ago was started by a costume designed for Greta Garbo by Adrian. The Swedish star wore it in "Mata Hari." Adrian refuses to design clothes for off-stage women, finding stage and screen actresses the best medium for introducing his exotic styles.



All the foremost costume designers in Hollywood are men. The one who has the greatest influence on American styles is Gilbert Adrian. The costumes he designs for Garbo, Crawford and Shearer are widely copied by girls from Bangor, Me., to Walla Walla, Wash. It was Adrian who introduced the vogue for dark blouses with light suits.

Plain Women Are Smartest, Says Man Who Gowns Stars

But He Thinks the Average Girl Doesn't Know the Beauty of Simplicity, nor That Bizarre Gowns Are Best Left on the Screen.

Most women do not know when to stop dressing, according to Adrian, who designed clothes for some of Hollywood's brightest luminaries.

"A costume is like a painting. It is better finished before too much detail rob it of its imaginative quality," says this young designer, who adds that it is dangerous business for the woman in everyday life to copy the glamorous attire of the movie stars.

"An actress makes her living by dramatizing herself. Naturally she is constantly striving for something new and striking in clothes. Because she is an actress she is granted the privilege of being slightly sensational and bizarre. The average woman has no excuse for this and should remember that fact before copying the stars' wardrobe, lest she choose something that had better remain a part of the theater."

Plain women are the smartest dressed today, declares Adrian. He believes that beauty is often a handicap and says that he has never known a beautiful-but-dumb woman to be a style leader.

"Intelligence is the first factor in selecting good-looking clothes," continues the Hollywood designer. "The intelligent woman knows that it is more important for her costumes to be becoming than for them to be fashionable. She should feel perfectly at home in her clothes and should make everything she wears reflect her personality. In this manner true individuality, something quite different from freakishness, is achieved.

"Too many women are trained seals in the matter of style. They take up with ridiculous eccentricities and silly fads instead of waiting until they are sure that a new fashion is well grounded. Fashions that become too popular should be shunned as a rule. It is this ability to discriminate between the freakish and the commonplace that makes a woman an authentic style leader."

As Curves Increase Potato Farmer Rejoices

Chester, England, Jan. 3 (AP).—Hope for the potato farmer in the growing feminine tendency toward curves was seen today by Capt. John Mollett, chairman of the British potato marketing board.

"If we can get women turned in that direction we shall grow more potatoes," he declared in a speech here.

Goblins Won't Scare Children In Detroit Schools Any More

CWA Artists Can Paint Wall Pictures, But not That Kind.

Detroit, Jan. 3 (AP).—The Detroit Board of Education has its own ideas regarding the type of art suitable for juvenile eyes, and it doesn't believe that gnomes, pixies, Mother Goose characters or Cheshire cats belong on the list.

Pictures of such time-honored nursery characters, certain members of the board contend, are unsuitable for schoolroom decorations because they may have an unfavorable effect on the juvenile imagination.

The board took its stand last night while discussing a list of proposed CWA projects which call for the painting of suitable murals in the schools by unemployed Detroit artists. The board authorized the projects, but placed heavy emphasis on the "suitable" provision.

"We can get along without Cheshire cats and tweedledums and tweedledees," declared Mrs. Laura F. Osborn, a board member. "Grotesque pictures have no place in the schools. The only effect they will have will be to send the children screaming to their mothers or giving them nightmares."

One member of the board suggested that the old woman who lived in a shoe might be suitable, but Mrs. Osborne would have none of her.

"I have never seen a picture of the old woman who lived in a shoe that didn't make her look like a fearsome witch," Mrs. Osborne replied. "If she could be made into a kindly, old lady, I suppose there would be no objection to her."

So the board approved 30 panels depicting the origins of smyphony orchestra instruments.

A Hollywood Poem Out of a History Book

For the most recent Garbo picture, "Queen Christina," Adrian has designed costumes that are not only picturesque but authentic. Before he begins work on the clothes for a movie, Adrian spends days doing research work so that the costumes will be true to the period in which the plot is laid.

Adrian Was "Discovered" In Paris by Irving Berlin

The Wizard of Tin Pan Alley Admired the Clever Frock a Lovely Girl Was Wearing at a Ball—Out of the Incident Sprang a New Couturier.

Clothes—the humble, historic raiment of the peasant woman; the glamorous, gorgeous attire of the feminine stars of the silver screen. As long as women are women the romance of what they wear is apt to endure.

So potent is the force of beautiful clothes that none can afford to ignore it. Ask Hollywood. There men—and men only—have invaded the ranks of the dress designers.

This is the fourth of a series of articles telling the stories of the world's famous dressmakers.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

A school teacher in Naugatuch, Conn., driven almost frantic by the restlessness of a 6-year-old boy, asked the youngster if he would like to draw soldiers on the blackboard. Soon the soldiers were marching around the entire room. The creator of this military parade was Gilbert Adrian, who now, 22 years later, tells Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford and other screen luminaries what to wear.

The school teacher was so impressed with the soldiers that she sent the pupil who had drawn them to other schoolrooms, where he made blackboard illustrations for all the holidays and seasons of the year. In looking back on this first triumph Adrian says he believes he was encouraged by the teachers because he saved them from work, rather than because they sensed the tender burgeoning of genius.

But Arian's mother, as countless mothers before her, was sure that her son possessed unusual gifts. When he was seven she led him firmly by the hand to an artist who lived in a nearby town. The artist placed two stuffed birds in front of the boy and told him to draw them. Adrian refused. The more his mother and the artist insisted the louder he grew in his refusals. To this day, after studying in New York and Paris, he is still unable to draw from life. All of his work is purely imaginative which makes it extremely effective on stage or screen but scarcely practical for everyday life.

School in New York.

After he had finished at the Naugatuch schools, Adrian persuaded his parents to send him to the School of Applied and Fine Art in New York.

Everything went swimmingly at the art school until the stuffed birds popped up in a new guise, called the "life" class. To Adrian the human models were repulsive. He refused to have anything to do with them just as he had refused to draw the artist's birds. While other students struggled to put the human torso on paper, Adrian blissfully studied the animals in the zoo.

Just as he was getting a bit tired of the animals and wondering how much longer he could play hookey from the "life" class, his school opened a branch in Paris. Immediately he transferred his interest from the zoo to the Siren on the Seine.

He had been studying in Paris about a year when a girl student asked him to design her a costume for the Grand Prix ball. He not only designed the costume but accompanied its wearer to the glittering affair. At intervals throughout the evening Adrian and his companion noticed a small, dark-eyed, serious faced man staring at them. The man with the serious face was Irving Berlin. He was attracted by the girl's unusual costume.

At the Ball in Paris.

Before the Grand Prix ball was over the young artist from Connecticut had met not only Mr. Berlin but his associate producer of the Music Box Revue, Hassard Short. Both men explained that they were looking for new costumes for the next show and asked Adrian to submit sketches to them at their hotel the next day.

But when he brought the sketches, Mr. Berlin scarcely looked at them. He was too wrought up over the disappearance of his pet dog. Mr. Short, however, approved the artist's work and asked him to submit costume designs for a ballet. Adrian worked all night on those sketches. When Mr. Berlin saw them (the dog had been found in the meantime) he gave the designer a contract to return to New York and costume the second Music Box Revue. Adrian also costumed the third edition of this lavish show.

Soon after he had completed this work he was chosen by Natacha Rambova, wife of the late Rudolph Valentino, to costume Valentino's picture, "The Hooded Falcon." Eight months were spent in research, thousands of dollars were invested, but the producers decided not to release the picture; just a quaint Hollywood custom.

To California.

Undaunted by this experience, Adrian went to California with the Valentinos and costumed "Cobra," "Son of the Sheik," "Black Eagle" and several other Valentino pictures. Later he became associated with Cecil B. DeMille and still later he signed a contract with one one of the largest and most important studios.

One of the first stars he costumed at this studio was Garbo. Adrian, by the magic of long, fluid lines, transformed the angular Swede into a romantic figure with mysterious allure. He and Garbo get along together beautifully, probably because she lets him have his way in the choice of what she is to wear.

This actress, who has driven producers and directors almost to distraction by her independence, is meek and childlike when Adrian is planning her clothes. Not once has she said to him "Ay tank ay go home." Although she takes little interest in fashion as fashion, Garbo is willing to experiment, which makes her a thrilling subject from the designer's point of view. By virtue of the daring things made for her by Adrian she is generally conceded to be the most important influence in American styles today.

Joan and Norma.

Other movie stars whose clothes are copied by fans from Tacoma to Pensacola are Joan Crawford and Norma Shearer. Adrian also designs their costumes. He gave la Crawford a new personality by taking her out of fancy, shop-girlish dresses and putting her into suavely simple, exquisitely fitted creations. He yanked bows and frills off Miss Shearer's pretty-pretty gowns and gave her the sort of costumes that express sophistication with glamour.

This magic was not performed without a good deal of opposition on the part of both movie queens. But Adrian was firm. He was also caustic. He is famous for his devastating wit and many actresses visit his salon to hear him make pungent remarks about other actresses, all in good, clean Hollywood fun.

He refuses to design for women in private life, but says that the two people he hopes to make creations for some day are the Marquesya Cassatti and Madame Rubenstein. He loves animals, antique furniture, flamboyant vests, and the colors white and lettuce green.

All I Know.

'Tis bitter cold for him who wears an old and threadbare coat.
'Tis bitter cold for him who owns no
muffler for his throat;
And never drifts the white snow down as winter settles in But what I think 'tis bitter cold for him whose shoes are thin.

The world is full of bickering now and full of words the air,
But wise men can not talk away a poor man's bleak despair.
I do not know which way is best,
the silver or the gold,
I only know who lacks a coat will find the winter cold.

I hear them at the tables as they argue con and pro,
But little of their logic do I understand or know.
I'm only sure of this as I look through the window panes
It's bitter cold to trudge the streets and look for work in vain.

Lorton Starts Work on New Dormitories

Wall Funds Exhausted and Building Stops on Inner Prison.

CWA Grant Permits the Start on Project to Cut Congestion.

Because of dwindling funds from one source and a supply of money from another, workmen were forced to stop building a walled enclosure at Lorton Reformatory yesterday and begin laying foundations for four new dormitories.

The wall is to surround the "prison within a prison," intended for incorrigibles, on which work was begun several months ago. Funds for this project ran out the other day.

In the meantime, a Civil Works appropriation was allocated the reformatory in Fairfax County. This money, it was specified, was to be used for the dormitories.

Will Ask $475,000 More.

District Commissioners have decided to ask Congress for an additional $475,000 in the deficiency bill to complete the prison within the prison. If it is granted it will take about three years to complete the project, Col. William Peak, superintendent of Lorton, said.

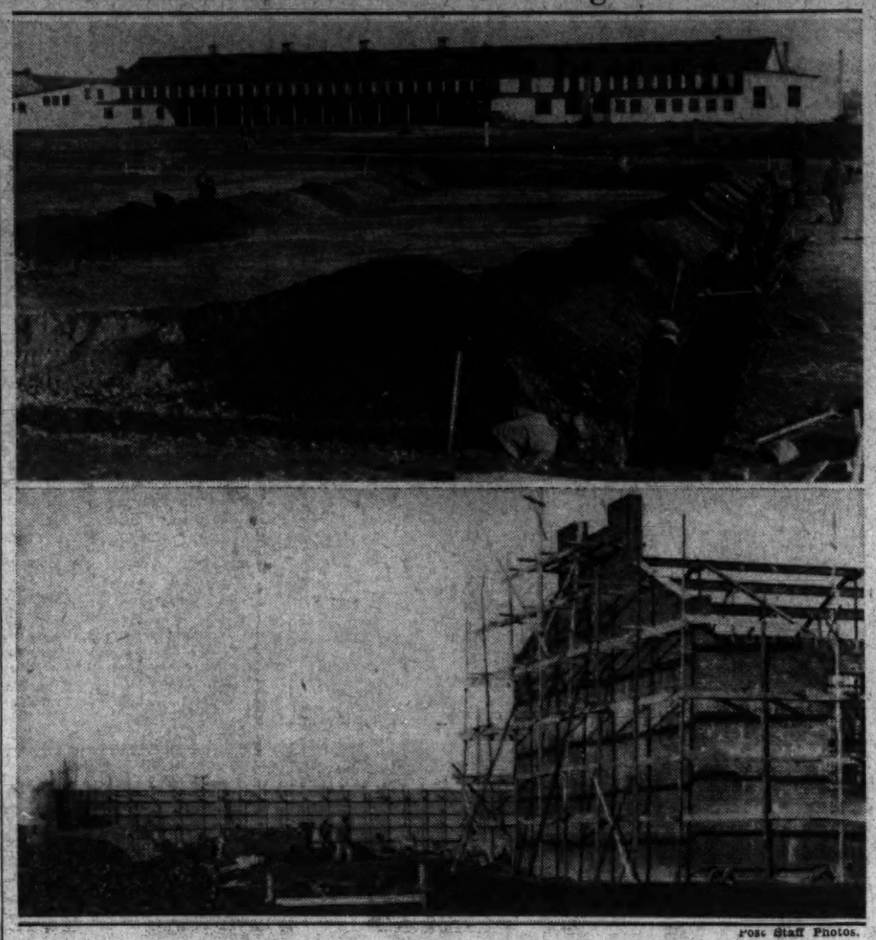
One-sixth of the 25-foot walled inclosure has been completed, together with two cell buildings and three shops. Seven buildings are lacking. These include two shops, an administration building, a kitchen and dining hall, and three more cell blocks—as well as the remainder of the wall. If the appropriation is obtained from Congress, the wall will be completed before anything else is done.

33 Men Now at Work.

Thirty-three men have been put to work on the dormitories and an equal number is expected to be assigned to the construction within a few days. The dormitories will be built of brick. Each dormitory will accommodate 80 men and will relieve congestion at the reformatory, where 1,176 men are housed in buildings constructed to accommodate 720.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, who has expressed concern over the uncompleted work, has directed Capt. M. M. Barnard, superintendent of penal institutions, to prepare a statement of conditions at the reformatory for Congress.

One Job Halted While Another Begins at Lorton



Post Staff Photos.

Work was halted on the walled inclosure at Lorton Reformatory yesterday and excavating was begun for new dormitories, as shown in the top picture. The uncompleted wall and shop, as seen in the lower view, were standing idle because funds from Congress were exhausted. Construction of the dormitories is possible through a Civil Works Administration appropriation by Fairfax County.

Hazen Plans Traffic Study For 'F' and 'G'

Change in Parking May Be Advocated to Van Duzer.

Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the Board of District Commissioners, yesterday notified Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer that he wished to confer with the traffic head regarding further parking restrictions on F and G streets between Fourteenth and Ninth streets.

While he has no definite plan, Hazen believes parking on these important trade thoroughfares should be limited. He believes the streets are now used too much for parking by persons other than shoppers.

The commissioner is not in sympathy with the traffic director's suggestion that F and G streets might be converted into one-way thoroughfares, and he wishes to discuss this proposal also.

A letter from Lewis L. Young, of 1705 Lanier place northwest, suggesting certain narrow streets be closed to motor traffic during rush periods so street car movements might be speeded, was turned over to Van Duzer by the commissioners.

Young pointed out that Government employes who ride to work on street cars are often delayed because automobiles line up in front of streets cars at intersections.

An invitation from New York State authorities to participate in a conference aimed at eliminating the bootlegging of gasoline along the northeastern seaboard was declined by the commissioner after a report by Tax Assessor William P. Richards stated there "may be some gasoline brought into the District illegally, but the amount is small."

Woman Slugged, Robbed in Home

Intruder Fells Her, Then Grabs $9.75, Flees.

A burglar who slugged her on the head at 734 Quebec place northwest yesterday, robbed Mrs. Ethel Stillman, 33, of $9.75, according to a police report.

Attracted by noise made by the prowler, Mrs. Stillman went to the rear porch of the house where the man is said to have struck her. Police were told the intruder then rushed into the house and snatched the money from the pocketbook.

Mrs. Stillman was treated by a physician.

Wellford McGee, 25, Dies of Crash Hurts

Driver of Car Freed, Not Yet Rearrested.

Wellford McGee, 25, of 133 E street northwest, died yesterday in Emergency Hospital from a skull fracture received December 9 when his motorcycle collided with an automobile at Sixth and E streets northwest.

Police said a resident of South Washington, Va., driver of the machine with which McGee collided, was released in custody of his attorney shortly after the accident. He had not been arrested late last night.

Margaret E. Hunt, 21, also of the E street address, was riding tandem on the motorcycle. She received a fractured right arm and severe lacerations.

The coroner's office is investigating the accident.

Gas Light Valuation Hearing Is Resumed

The Public Utilities Commission hearing on valuation of the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light companies was resumed yesterday.

S. F. Kosters, appraisal engineer of Stone & Webster, occupied the day explaining the details of a working capital of $1,984,149. William A. Roberts, special commission counsel, challenged the inclusion of the financing of gas appliances in the fund, but a ruling was deferred until today.

Library Exhibit Shows How Textiles Are Made

A collection of pictures and specimens illustrating the manufacture of textiles was on display yesterday at the Public Library, Eighth and K streets northwest. Stages in the making of linen damask from flax, rayon from spruce chips, and mohair plush and woolen goods are shown.

The collection was loaned the library by Dr. Frederick L. Lawton, currator of the textile division of the National Museum.

Pretty Soft!

Thieves Prey on Offices of U. S. Crime Experts.

Crime experts of the Department of Justice were "scooped" yesterday when two thefts in their building were reported among four thefts from Government departments.

James W. Beall, 802 Kennedy street northwest, and T. N. Young, of Clarendon, Va., told police their overcoats were stolen while they worked at the Justice Department.

Apparently satisfied with their first success, the thieves shifted activities to the Department of Agriculture. Margery Gray, of Glendale, Md., said she lost her pocketbook containing $20 and a gold watch, while John L. Bedell reported an imported overcoat missing.

Engineer Chief Asks $180,000 For Flats Job

Anacostia Project Is 72 Per Cent Completed, Reports Shows.

Expenditure of $180,000 in 1935 fiscal year for reclamation and development of Anacostia flats was recommended to Congress yesterday by the Chief of Army Engineers.

Maj. J. D. Arthur, jr., District engineer, reported the project was 79.2 per cent completed. He recommended the following appropriations for work in the coming year:

Dredging, $15,000; trenching and levee construction, $10,000; sea wall foundations, $48,000; masonry sea wall, $70,000; effluent conduit, $30,000; labor gangs on levees, $4,000, and supervision of dump fills, $3,000.

A total of 31,047 acres of land in the area was acquired by purchase and condemnation during the year at a cost of $18,546.69, Maj. Arthur reported.

The Government has spent, up to June 30, 1933, $3,386,754, the report revealed. This leaves $137,472 unexpended on that date. It will be used in continuing the project during this fiscal year.

From the reclamed land, part will be set aside for a National aboretum and botanical garden, while the water front on the right side of the river from the Anacostia Bridge to the Pennsylvania Railroad Bridge will be set aside for commercial purposes.

Letts Denies Duke Charged Court Errors

Justice Says Allegations First Presented in Appeals Court.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts, District Supreme Court, appearing as a prosecution witness against Attorney Jesse C. Duke, who is being tried in disbarment proceedings, yesterday denied that Duke had ever made, in his court, the charges that he later made before the Court of Appeals and which led to the grievance committee of the bar association instituting action.

Justice Letts declared Duke "never made those charges in my court." The charges referred to were that Justice Letts and United States Attorney Leo A. Rover had sent up to the Court of Appeals a bill of exceptions that was "false, inaccurate, incomplete, diluted and deleted." Duke had claimed the allegations had been made prior to the filing of the bill.

Shortly after making his assertion Justice Letts was excused from the stand and Capt. Harold W. Orcutt, assistant United States Attorney, was recalled to explain where some missing exhibits were. It was shown that many of the exhibits used in a rum trial had been returned to persons entitled to them.

A bid for a directed verdict at the hands of the three-judge court was then begun by Duke and his associates. Court was adjourned until today with additional time allowed for Duke to present his arguments.

The argument that because the accusations against Rover and Justice Letts were made in the Court of Appeals it was contempt of that court rather than "unethical conduct" in the lower court was advanced by Duke in asking that the charges against him be dismissed.

Interest in U. S. Park System Is Increasing

Interest in the Nation's park system is at a higher level than ever before if the number of requests for press release service pouring into the Office of Parks, Buildings and Reservations is an accurate gauge.

A few days before Christmas, 600 form letters were sent out to individuals and organizations on the mailing list in all parts of the country. They were asked if they wished the service continued in 1934. About half of them already have been returned, and the office has received hundreds of other letters from persons asking to be placed on the mailing list.

Candy Selling Teachers Arouse Merchant's Ire

Charges that a merchant can not pay rent on his store because of candy sales in schools by teachers were laid before the Board of Education yesterday by a realty company, representing the storekeeper.

The specific complaint was made against the Joseph P. Henry School, on P street between Sixth and Seventh streets northwest. The realty company contended that pupils are forbidden to leave the school grounds during recess and that candy and "knicknacks" are sold them by the teachers. Superintendent Frank W. Ballou said he would investigate the complaint.

Joe Engle's Former Wife Tells Court He Owes Her $1,575

Joseph W. (Joe) Engle, well known baseball player and promoter, is in arrears $1,575 in alimony, Mrs. Mary P. Engle informed the District Supreme Court yesterday in asking that he be adjudged in contempt.

Mrs. Engle said her former husband was ordered to pay $225 a month when she was awarded a limited divorce on grounds of desertion in 1930. The payments have been irregular, she said, and lately stopped.

Engle is a former big league baseball pitcher. He played with the Washington team and later acted as a scout. He is president of the Chattanooga Baseball Club, known as the baseball farm for the Washington team.

Engle's 9-year-old son, Bryant Engle, was killed here November 18, 1930, by an automobile at Seventeenth street and Columbia road, northwest, the same day Mrs. Engle won her divorce.

School Board Speeds Plan Of Nurseries

Dr. Ballou Hopes Classes Will Begin Before End of Month.

$8,000 Monthly Cost Set for Child and Adult Program.

Cost of operating nursery classes and adult rehabilitation work in District schools was set at $8,000 a month by the Board of Education yesterday.

The board will ask the District Commissioners to request the Federal Relief Administration to allot this sum monthly for employment of 160 teachers for the new classes. The program includes classes for illiterate adults and vocational training for unemployed, as well as the nursery schools.

A separate program approved by the board calls for employment of 50 persons to conduct Community Center work, the appropriation for this to be allocated by the Civil Works Administration. The teaching activities come under educational relief.

Six teachers will be asked to teach illiterates, three for white and three for colored. The classes will be established in the Americanization and other evening schools. The board agreed to "loan" the Federal rehabilitation agency some of the teachers assigned to District schools. The Federal department, Dr. Ballou explained, has no other means of obtaining an increased personnel in the District.

More Teachers Possible.

If a large enough response is given by illiterates, more teachers will be assigned and additional classes will be established, the board indicated. This would be possible because, under the original program, the employment of 160 teachers for the various projects was not contemplated.

Dr. Ballou expressed hope that the classes for children of preschool age and for the adults will begin before the end of the month. Mrs. Philip Sydney Smith observed that the funds will last only until February. The superintendent assured her it is generally believed the entire Federal relief program will be extended.

Reporting on the school free lunch program, Dr. Ballou said 78 school buildings will be included in the school service by next week and that 3,000 pupils will be receiving the food. At present 1,892 children from 44 different schools are receiving meals at 35 buildings.

Praised for Efficiency.

Robert L. Haycock, chairman of the lunch committee, and Dr. Ballou were accorded a vote of thanks for putting the lunch program into operation in time for the opening of schools Tuesday.

Regardless of this relief program, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle asked that another census be made of absent children to determine how many are staying away from school because of lack of clothing. Dr. Ballou agreed to have this check conducted at the earliest opportunity by the department of school attendance, of which Miss Fay Bentley is in charge. A survey conducted in October revealed that 211 children were absent in one week, while a second one, made in November, showed 194 absentees.

Course Is Offered In Home Hygiene

Red Cross Instruction to Start Next Tuesday.

A course in home hygiene and care of the sick will be inaugurated next Tuesday by District of Columbia Chapter, American Red Cross, it was announced yesterday. Practical instructions will be given to enable students to care for ill members of the family in the home.

A fee of $5 will be made for the course, which consists of 12 lessons of 2 hours each. This sum includes cost of the textbook.

Upon completion of the series of lessons and fulfillment of necessary requirements, the student may become a "health aid" if she is willing to volunteer for this service. It is planned to place health aids in hospitals and related institutions.

Additional information on the health course may be obtained from Miss F. Evelyn Paton.

Grant School Is "Disgrace," Citizens Say

New Building Demanded as Parents Object to Heating.

Demands for a new building to replace the Grant School, object of a pre-Christmas row by parents because of lack of heat, were placed before the Board of Education yesterday by the West End Citizens Association.

The school, one of the oldest in Washington, was described as a disgrace to the local school system in a lengthy argument presented by the association.

Threat Is Avoided.

Calling attention to the recent closing of the school because of lack of heat, Superintendent Frank W. Ballou told the board this was the first time in three years that a Washington public school building was closed for that reason.

Avoiding reference to the threat of parents to keep children out of school if the building was not properly heated, the superintendent said the school was closed for the day on recommendation of a special board of inquiry, set up some years ago to investigate heating conditions in schools.

This board, Dr. Ballou said, investigated Grant School and made recommendations for repairs. These improvements were made immediately, the superintendent reported.

Mothers Oversee Heating.

Mothers of pupils at the school, however, contend they were responsible for the remedying the heating situation. A committee of mothers, it was recalled, visited the school at 5 a. m. and took an active part in heating the building. The mothers' committee then occupied classes and kept an eye on thermometers to satisfy themselves the heat was satisfactory.

Mrs. Belle Cutler Parker, chairman of the committee, said another visit will be made to the school on the first cold day and if heat is insufficient children will be withdrawn.

Funeral services for David G. Coran, 40, an employe at the Veterans' Bureau, who died Tuesday night at Mount Alto Hospital, will be held at 1 p. m. today at the Danzansky funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest. Burial will be at the Tiffereth-Israel Cemetery, Anacostia.

Mr. Coran was a member of Harmony Lodge of Masons. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances L. Coran, and two children, Edward and Dolores.

School, Street Projects Occupy Majority of Group Here.

Approximately $1,000,000 in wages has been paid CWA workers on District projects since November 17, and $300,000 spent on materials, Capt. Howard F. Clark, District CWA chairman, announced yesterday.

All of the work has been beneficial, he said, and will save the District money. The work has varied, though street improvements and school grounds have occupied the majority of workers.

Among the projects being completed by CWA workers are the painting of Roosevelt High School, wrecking of Acqueduct Bridge, and improvements at Bolling Field. Commercial estimates on the school painting and the bridge removal were $10,000 and $6$$0,000, respectively.

Capt. Clark said the committee decided to proceed with the removal of stone piers at Acqueduct Bridge despite a congressional suggestion they might be left to furnish a base for a connecting link between contemplated park driveways on both sides of the Potomac River.

A request was received yesterday from Gallinger Hospital for the assignment of CWA workers for paving work on the hospital grounds.

Federal Pay Restoration Will Be Small

Announcement Believed Possible Today on New Cost Basis.

Employe Leaders Calm Despite Roosevelt's Expressed Doubts.

A small portion of the 15 per cent Federal pay cut may be restored today by President Roosevelt.

Additional supporting figures on living costs, to be the basis of Presidential action, were taken to the White House late yesterday by Secretary Perkins and Charles H. Fullaway, of the Budget Bureau. On emerging from the Executive offices, Miss Perkins declared she had been given "a lesson in economics."

At the President's biweekly press conference earlier in the day, reporters were officially cautioned to go slow on predictions of a substantial restoration. Mr. Roosevelt declared rumors that 6 per cent was the amount decided on were without foundation. It was possible, but not probable, that there would be no restoration.

Claims No Leeway.

The President emphasized that the law gave him no discretion and indicated his ultimate action might not conform with his personal desires.

Leaders of employe organizations were undisturbed by developments. They agreed their chances of obtaining full restoration by Congress would be enhanced should the President decide on a low salary level. The workers believed the smaller the pay increase the greater the pressure likely to be brought to bear on Congress.

Informed observers emphasized that the President's ruling would govern wages only for the six months beginning January 1 and that the decision on the level to prevail after July 1 rests solely with Congress. Employes conceded that a favorable expression by the President, aside from his Executive Order, would be of great help on the Hill.

Living Costs Factor.

Under the economy act, passed by Congress last March, the President was authorized to restore the pay cut January 1 within a 15 per cent range and strictly on the basis of living costs statistics, since compiled by the Labor Department. Although a report comparing present prices with those existing in 1928 was sent to the White House Saturday night, its contents have not been revealed.

Leaders of employes have criticized the practice of emphasizing living costs in fixing salaries on the grounds that it is difficult to keep such figures up to date and that the salary level should not be subject to periodical change.

Babe Ruth, Expecting Salary Cut, Begins Annual Training in Gym

King of Swat Would Take $40,000

Ceremony Unlike Those of Past; Laughs Give Way to Sadness.

Babe Gives Indication of Managership Job in Year or Two.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (AP).—The mammoth figure of Babe Ruth, the only one of its kind, was dragged from its winter hibernation today for the annual ceremony of taping the waist line, tapping the chest, and general appraisal in the muscle parlors of Artie McGovern.

To sport it's a ceremony jammed full of significance, as meaningful and official a sign of the start of a new sports year as the coming of the first robin is an augury of spring. In the past it has been a tremendously bumptious and happy occasion, with gusty wise cracks, hearty laughter, flexing of biceps, probing of a voluminous stomach, along with questions as to baseball, contracts, and always the one all-absorbing query:

"Do you think you can break your old home run record this year, Babe?"

Sad Rite This Time.

So this time it was a trifle said.

The only question anyone asked about home run hitting was whether he thought Jimmie Foxx, the sole survivor of Connie Mack's lost battalion, would ever exceed the top man's record of 60. The Babe answered: "He's the only guy with a chance."

The Babe will be 40 years old in five weeks. From every indication the boys were weighing him in for the last time today as an active ball player, as the King of Swat, the great, artless fellow who in his 20 years in the major leagues revolutionized the science of clouting for distance.

It was a quiet, business-like, calm Babe Ruth, then, who sat and discussed this final stage of his career.

"I expect I'll take a cut this year when Col. Jake Ruppert sends out the contracts," he said. "But I won't say anything about that until I get my contract with the rest in February. I hope the colonel will be reasonable."

Salary Theme Note.

The theme note of the entire discussion was struck right there. The Babe got $52,000 for playing in 132 games with the Yankees last season, many of them stumbling, halting games in which younger and more energetic fielders were called in relief in the late innings.

"I'm going to play 100 games this season. I'll bet all I've got that I do that."

It would be all right with him, he intimated, if Col. Ruppert, who owns the Yankees, offers a contract in keeping with that 100-game schedule, say $40,000. It is considerable more than the experts believe the colonel will offer. And there the second keynote was struck.

"I think everything will come out all right in the end," he said calmly. "I want to leave baseball in the right way. I don't want to go while I still have some good baseball left in me. But I don't want to stay until they put me out."

Pilot Berth Hinted.

A far cry, indeed, from the riotous Ruth who has been accustomed to battle the colonel loud and long through the winter season over his annual pittance that reached an $80,000 high in 1930 and 1931. Indications of more important things in the wind than salary quarrels, possibly the managership of the Yankees within a year or two, were evident when the Babe said:

"I don't want to talk about managing a club now. There's a lot of under-cover stuff about that I can't discuss."

Occasionally there was a slash of the old Ruth, as when, for instance, he was asked about pitching another game this year as he did last, and he burst forth with: "Hell, no, my arm was so sore I couldn't comb my hair for three weeks."

But on the whole it was the rather definite marking of the end of a great era. The day of the madcap mauler has gone forever.

Cunningham Slated to Run Against Beccali, Bonthron

Kansan to Enter Wanamaker Mile in New York on February 3, and a Week Later Will Compete in Boston Event.

LAWRENCE, Kans., Jan. 3 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham, of Kansas, who was awarded the Sullivan Memorial medal for a long list of triumphs at the middle distances last year, will inaugurate his 1934 competitive campaign in the Wanamaker mile at the Millrose A. A. games in New York, February 3.

The indoor season schedule of the University of Kansas' much-sought athlete was submitted to the athletic board today by Coach H. W. (Bill) Hargiss for approval which likely will be granted tomorrow.

Cunningham's second race in the East will be run at the Boston A. A. carnival, February 10.

In the Wanamaker mile, the "Elkhart Flyer" will match strides with Luigi Beccali, the invading Italian who won the olympic 1,500-meter race in which Cunningham was the first American to finish.

Although Beccali's entry has not been received, Dan Ferris, secretary of the A. A. U., said he understood there was a "favorable reply" en route from the Italian Amateur Athletic Federation in answer to the invitation extended by the Amateur Athletic Union.

Other probable entrants are Bill Bonthron, of Princeton, who ran the fastest mile ever paced by an American in finishing second to Jack Lovelock, of Oxford, when he set a world record of 4:07.6 at Princeton last summer; Gene Venzke, of Pennsylvania, Mangum, of Cornell and Crawley, of Manhattan College.

"What a race that will be if they all run," Hargiss said.

The Jayhawker coach discounted the possibility that Cunningham will be able to race Lovelock, who recently underwent a knee operation.

However, Beccali has beaten Lovelock, and in Hargiss' opinion the new "Big Three" of the middle distances, for the time at least, comprises Beccali, Cunningham and Bonthron.

Bonthron was timed at 4:08.7 in finishing second to Lovelock in the greatest mile run of all time. Cunningham's best was 4:09.9 at the National Collegiate A. A. Carnival in Chicago last summer.

In 1933, Cunningham won 29 of 32 races, from 800 meters to 2 miles, in the United States, Canada and Europe and was undefeated in 13 European starts, his victims including Erik Ny, of Sweden.

He has never met Becalli or Bonthron, but he had the better of Venzke in every duel they fought except the A. A. U. indoor 1,500-meter last winter, when he was handicapped by an accidental sock in the eye at the crowded start.

Among the best records he established last year was 3:52.3 in the A. A. U. outdoor 1,500-meter at Chicago. Becalli's world record is 3:49.

Schools Will Open Title Soccer Today

Park View and Burroughs in Three-Game Finals.

Weather permitting, soccer teams representing Park View and Burroughs Elementary Schools will meet this afternoon on the Burroughs Playground in the final of the Municipal Department of Playgrounds annual competition. Today's match is the first of a three-game series for the title of city champion.

Both teams overcame sturdy opposition en route to the final, Park View, Western Division winners, having eliminated Gales, Fillmore and Emory, while Burroughs, by defeating Wallach and Lenox, took Eastern Division honors.

The kick-off is set for 3:30, and the second game will be played next Tuesday.

American Five At Farmville Tonight

Plays Hampden-Sydney as Other D. C. College Tossers Idle.

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY'S game with Hampden-Sydney at Farmville, Va., is the lone cage attraction involving a local team scheduled tonight, but tomorrow there will be firing on all fronts. Tonight's fray is the first of three for the Eagles, who meet Elon and Guilford on their three-day trip.

George Washington idles today after its brush with Temple last night in Philadelphia, but tomorrow the O'Leary-coached Colonials will be at Wake Forest battling the Deacons. Georgetown has a date with Manhattan tomorrow at New York, and Maryland is down for a game with West Virginia at Cumberland.

Two Full Eagle Teams.

Coach Walter Young is taking two full teams on the Virginia trip and probably will use everybody. The Eagles' line-up will contain the same men who started against Maryland State Normal in the season's opener. Porter and Wheatley have been assigned the forward berths, Hill, center; and Sampson and Borsari, guards. This is the strongest group uncovered by Young thus far.

Maryland's squad was increased by one yesterday when Norwood Sothoron, football and lacrosse star, reported. The lad is one of the most versatile athletes in school and, although he has not had much experience, is counted a valuable addition. addition. Vic Willis, a 6-foot 4-inch center, becomes eligible the latter part of the month, giving Coach Shipley two full teams for the remainder of the season.

West Virginia has a veteran squad back from last season, and has been practicing since December 26 for tomorrow night's game. Al Colebank, Joe Stydahar, Andy Mestrovick and Bill Klug bore the brunt of the attack against West Virginia Wesleyan, whom the Mountaineers conquered, 32-24, in the opening game of the season.

G. U. Drills With Eastern.

Georgetown scrimmaged with Eastern High School yesterday and was unimpressive. It was the squad's first practice together since before the Christmas holidays, and it looked it. Manhattan and New York U., which will be met Saturday in Gotham, have strong clubs, and the Hilltoppers will be an easy foil for both unless they show a sudden reversal of form.

Catholic U.'s Varsity was sent against the Frosh in a lengthy workout that found both teams decidedly off edge. The Cardinals will work overtime the remainder of this week to be in tiptop shape for Saturday's game with Gallaudet.

Navy B Grid Squad Honors to Kinsella

Wins 'Class of 1928' Award for 1933 Services.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Midshipman William T. Kinsella, senior class, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., today was declared winner of the "Class of 1928" award for the member of the graduating class, who, by his spirit and character while serving on the B squad, did most to promote football at the Naval Academy during the year.

The award consists of a pair of marine binoculars, or a watch, by choice of the recipient, and the presentation will be made along with other athletic awards at commencement exercises in June.

Majors to Decide Upon Uniform Ball Tomorrow

Future Batting Averages to Give True Basis of Comparison of Hitters in American and National Opening Here April 16.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3 (AP).—The uniform baseball will be born next Friday at Philadelphia.

On that day the presidents of the two major leagues will meet with John Shibe, baseball manufacturer and secretary-treasurer of the Philadelphia Athletics, to pick out the uniform sphere that promises to add more dynamite to the National League bats. The ball will follow closely along the lines of that used last season in the American League.

As President Will Harridge of the American League got ready for the big "birthday party," it was announced today that not only the major league club owners, but all three Class AA leagues were behind the uniform ball.

Big Minors Follow Suit.

The International and Pacific Coast Leagues and the American Association all were ready to use the same ball in their pennant campaigns next season. Most of the other minor leagues will use a cheaper ball, but will attempt to get one as near as possible to the uniform ball specifications.

"Well, the newspapermen are going to lose some material for good stories after Friday," Harridge remarked. "After Friday, we'll all have the same ball in the majors and you fellows can't figure out how much Chuck Klein would hit with an American League ball or what Jimmie Foxx could do with a National League sphere. No figures on batting averages in the majors will tell lies hereafter, although the class of pitching in the two leagues may differ from year to year. Adoption of a uniform baseball, I believe with President Heydler of the National League, is one of the greatest forward steps taken in the National game."

Special Opener Here April 16.

From Philadelphia, Presidents Heydler and Harridge will go to New York to attend the schedule meeting. The 1934 season will run 154 games, opening April 17, closing September 30, and give each team 12 Sunday dates at home. In Washington, a special opener, will be played on April 16. Legalization of Sunday baseball in Pennsylvania will eliminate any conflicts in the schedules, notably in Chicago where the Cubs and White Sox have been forced to play at home on the same day several times each season.

President Harridge also said that the American League had rescinded its rule against interleague spring exhibition games.

"Last year, we broke the rule so Cleveland and Washington could play each other in spring exhibitions because those two teams were isolated from other clubs," he said. "But in 1934, the American League clubs can play each other at any time and any place except in American League cities."

Caras, Cue Star, Due Here Tonight

Plays at Lewis-Krauss and Arcadia Parlors.

James (Jimmy) Caras makes one of those "boy who made good" returns to the Capital City tonight. A former Washington boy, Jimmy has been cutting a wide swath in professional pocket-billiard play, recently winning fourth place in the world's title tournament. He shows in two matches here tonight, following each with an exhibition of trick and fancy shooting.

At 8 o'clock, Caras will entertain at the Lewis & Kraus parlors, meeting one of the District's ranking amateurs, while an hour later he will be seen at the Arcadia, where he clashes with Al Haga, Washington amateur champ. No admission will be charged to either match.

Caras is one of a group of seven nationally known players touring the country in the interest of billiards. Other prominent players to appear at the two parlors named above are Willie Hoppe, world's 18.1 and cushion-carom champ; Johnny Layton, 10-time holder of the three-cushion crown; Erwin Rudolph, newly crowned pocket-billiard king, and Andrew Ponzi, runner-up to Rudolph.

Gun Club Is Sold.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Cacapon Rod and Gun Club property, located about 11 miles from Berkeley Springs, on Cacapon River, a popular hunting and fishing place, has been purchased at public sale by J. A. Proctor, H. D. Beeler and W. Jack Hunter, members of the club.

Battles Rated Best Pro Gridman

Harry Newman Praises Former Wesleyan Ace; Well Known Here.

By Chick Kenny.

THEY said he was one of the greatest backs they ever saw in a college game. But the fact remained, they also said, he should have played on a major college team.

So now he is picked as the greatest back in pro football today. And being the outstanding pro back, is certainly being the greatest college back. There are no bones about that!

The gentleman in question is Cliff (Gyp) Battles, formerly with West Virginia Wesleyan, and now the ace in the back field of the Boston Redskins, National professional football team. The pronouncement comes from none other than Harry Newman, formerly with the University of Michigan, and now the field general of the New York Giants. And certainly the former Wolverine All-America, signal barker and forward passing star ought to know.

Hard Man to Tackle.

Commenting on the flaming ability of the Gyp, Newman churns that the star is the greatest running back in the pro ranks as well as the hardest to bring down. Newman solliloquizes that in one game he tackled Battles and had Cliff's ankles locked against his chest, gripping as hard as he could grip them.

"But all that I got for my fine tackle was a split lip," said Newman. "He kicked loose and one of his heels hit me in the mouth and he was off for a score and I was out."

Battles was a star in every game he played in college. There was seldom a game that he did not reel off a spectacular run from at least midfield. Against Georgetown in 1930, he ran a punt back 90 yards for a touchdown, and another for 70 yards for a score against the same team. That year he reeled off a 70 and a 65 yard scrimmage run for scores against New York University. He knocked Duquesne out of the undefeated class that same season by scooting 75 yards for the tally.

The following year he repeated his long distance racing against the aforementioned teams, along with the Navy.

In 1932 he joined the Boston pros and continued to shine in a galloping touchdown capacity.

Hubbard Greatest Tackle.

Commenting on the "long suits" of the various professional football stars of the past season, Newman classes Cal Hubbard, former Geneva College star, now with Green Bay, as the league's greatest tackle. Hewitt, of the Chicago Bears, is the outstanding end; Michalske, of Geen Bay, as the best guard, and Mel Hein, formerly with Washington State, as the best of the crop of centers.

It is interesting to note that the Brooklyn barker places Glenn Presnell, former Nebraska Cornhusker quarter back, and now with the Portsmouth Spartans, as the best in the pro league quarter berth; Ernie Pinckert, late of Southern California, and with the Redskins now, as the best blocking back. Newman claims the Trojan is a shade better than Father Lumpkin, former Georgia Techer and now with Portsmouth. He states that Strong, of the Giants, and Manders, of the Bears, are the best punters and place kickers, and that Bronko Nagurski is the best plunging back. Ken Strong is a former New York University star, while Manders and Nagurski punted and plunged for Minnesota.

They say that Newman knows his football, pro and collegiate, so he certainly should know the outstanding pro football players this year. He played with or against them all.

Dixie Grid Coaches Vote Smith Best Trail Breaker

V. P. I. Full Back Wins Jacobs Cup as Ranking Interference Man for Ball Carrier; Barclay, Bailey Tied for Second Honors.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—There were flashier lads who stole the show and won the favor of the stands but none of them, in the opinion of Southern Conference coaches and scouts, was the equal of George Smith, Virginia Tech full back, as an interference man.

In competition with a classy field, Smith gathered enough votes to win a cup donated by William P. Jacobs, well-known Clinton, S. C. sports enthusiast, as the loop's best trail breaker, C. P. Miles, Southern Conference president, announced today.

Congratulating Smith, Miles said the cup "is in capable and deserving hands." Praising the spirit of the cup's donor, the conference president said he believed Jacobs was "doing much for the 'forgotten man' of the gridiron—the player who unselfishly clears the way for others to score the touchdowns and win the plaudits of the stands."

It was no runaway race for the Virginia Tech candidate, who was pressed closely by George Barclay, North Carolina's brilliant all-Southern Conference guard, and Jack Bailey, husky Washington and Lee sophomore, who tied for second honors.

The plan of balloting, devised by newspapermen, provided that coaches and scouts at each conference school designate first, second and third choices for the award, with five points for first place, three for second and one for third.

Smith led the balloting with 14 votes, with Barclay and Bailey tied at 10 each. Other candidates and their votes were: Wilson, North Carolina State, 6; Belue, Duke, 6; Hendrickson, Duke, 6; Hambright, South Carolina, 5; Bolen, Washington and Lee, 4; J. Dunlap, Duke, 3; Johnson, Virginia, 3; Urick, V. M. I., 1; Dial, Virginia, 1; Berger, Virginia, 1; Sawyers, Washington and Lee, 1.

The cup will be awarded annually.

Smith, whose ability was recognized not only by the coaches and scouts but with the boys with whom he played, will captain the Tech eleven next year.

New Glory

Golden Gloves Amateurs Find Power Hidden Away in Fists.

By Jimmy Powers.
(Pinch hitting for Gallico).

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Power and glory department—In these harried days fame and fortune ride spavined nags. Raises are rare, money is scarce. For those restless young souls who are imprisoned at a teller's cage, an office desk, or pinned on a truck seat the golden gloves offers escape.

The golden gloves, neighbor, is an institution of amateur boxing popularized in Chicago by the Daily Tribune and in New York by the Daily News. Growing from a small start in both cities several years ago, the promotions have grown steadily until they have overlapped city limits and drawn in good amateurs from adjacent towns and territories. A yearly intercity contest has decided the city champion while several special series have been held which drew opponents from Ireland and France for international golden gloves honors. In New York City the number of entrants has run as high as 6,000, weeded down by the leather route to 16 classes of finalists, two in each class, a total of 32 cream-of-the crop at the finals.

I think of all classes the subnovice holds the greatest interest. These are young men over 18 who are tyros. Many of them, modest, are unaware of latent talents but are secure in the knowledge that they will be called upon to feint, lead and parry only with others of similar inexperience. I eagerly look for the expression in a pardonably cautious and timid beginner's eyes when, for the first time in competition, he floors his man. He is reborn on the spot. He gazes fascinated at his gloved fist and a warm glow kindles his heart as if someone had switched on an electric heat.

Fame is no laggard in the golden gloves. Overnight the fortunate youth is the talk of the town. Great columns of type, double trucks of photographs, a million eyes gaze upon his ink-stained features and 20,000 throats cheer his Garden debut. Consider the good-looking Julie Katz, then unknown, who fought under the Holy Name Club colors as a subnovice three years ago. Julie had no idea that he was as good as he was. He won two golden gloves and two intercity titles. Johnny Makar was another from obscurity and so was Max Glickman the roly-poly heavyweight who appeared constantly to be wheezily out of shape, yet who developed into one of the strongest and neatest boxers in this most important of all amateur tournaments. Send in your applications, my young friends. This is the opportunity for embryo Galahads of the Gym. It is as if someone had said: "Here, lad, is a flaming sword, a silver suit and a great white horse. It is your chance to ride bravely into battle."

Revenge division—It is "Meet the new manager" in Philadelphia today and handsome, intelligent Jimmy Wilson acknowledges the congratulations of his friends. Wilson was traded by the Cardinals to the Phil's because Frankie Frisch declared that his catcher thought he knew as much if not more about managing a ball club. Wilson is conscientious. He keeps a notebook filled with the batting weaknesses and strengths of every hitter. He even knows what the pitchers bite at and takes no chances crouching behind that plate.

When Gabby Street was manager, Frisch and Wilson were delegated the task of running the Cardinals on the field and making those snap decisions not semaphored or overruled from the dugout. When Frisch took over the job he brusquely said, "I'm running the club now, Jim, you take all your signals from me." One day during a St. Louis rally Frisch turned in the dugout and snarled at Jim for his silence. "You told me to keep my mouth shut and I'm keeping it shut," grouched Wilson.

I think the most important decision a manager has to make is the switching of pitchers. Some jerk them too soon; some, too late. Now a catcher is the first to know when his pitcher is slipping. He gauges the curves and the break on the fast one. He can instantly sense a slackening of speed or a deadening arm. If he conveys this information as frequently as it occurs to his manager that gentleman in time, is inclined to get huffy. Sometimes he will stubbornly reject the suggestion and ill feeling develops.

Jim and Frank are equally popular. There was no other way out. Now Jim has his own club and will try naturally to revenge himself by beating Frankie's club as badly and as often as he can. Did I say they gave Jim a ball club? Those Phil's with Chuck Klein gone and no pitchers are a hodge-podge of scallywags.

The master—All the time Ruth was puffing and the cameras were whirring I was thinking of the National League's best player, Carl Hubbell, and wondering if they had ever set up a sound box in Meeker, Okla. (population 562). Baseball

First "Baby" Race of Year Sees No Saint Break Track Record at Tropical Park

Whitney Colt 3-Length Victor

Skippy McGee, Heavily Played, Second; Show Money to Hilise.

Another Triple Registered by Jockey Earl Porter.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., Jan. 3 (AP).—The first batch of the season's new 2-year-olds went on display in the 3 furlong initial event here today and out of the lot emerged a fine looking High Time colt named No Saint to ring up an impressive victory in his debut. Sporting the popular silks of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, the brown youngster led his field from the drop of the flag to win by 3 lengths in 35 seconds flat. This time created a new track record, clipping a full second off the mark created by Helios two years ago. No Saint, not overlooked by the advance information boys, closed a $4.60 for $2 favorite.

Aside from the winner, the race developed plenty of alleged good things. One of these, Dixiana's Skippy McGee, was backed down to a close second choice and he wound up second, three lengths before H. P. Headley's Hilise.

No Saint Bounds to Fore.

The inside horses, favored by their post positions because of the turns, broke very fast. No Saint bounded right to the front under Bobby Jones and quickly sprinted well clear of Skippy McGee. The latter never threatened the leader. Hilise held the others safe at all times and was an easy third. Another budding racer that showed well was Abner, one that broke from the extreme outside, raced very wide and finished fifth.

J. E. Widener's silks were flown in the Coral Gables oval for the first time in the second event, but not successfully. Hasty Belle represented the Philadelphia sportsman and drew most of the play, but the filly broke poorly and was unable to reach contention. Mervin B. took the spoils under a strong ride by Earl Porter. The 3-to-1 shot was all out after setting the pace and just lasted to beat Bickering by a half length. Knights Hope was a fair third.

Indian Salute Pays $75.50.

The talent received a shock when Indian Salute, with the unfashionable apprentice, F. Faschek, riding the second mount of his career, in the saddle, staggered home a winner by a half length in the third contest at odds of $75.50 for $2. Patrice Runyon beat Texas Tommy a length for the runner-up position. Indian Salute raced Texas Tommy into defeat in the first half-mile, took the lead, but was rapidly giving ground to Patrice Runyon in the closing strides.

Don Meade gave Broad Meadows, $3.20 favorite, one of his most powerful rides to account for the fourth purse. The E. R. Bradley banner flashed home by a length after a spirited drive with Porter's Dream. My Purchase was a close and fast-closing third. Meade swung the choice to the front and with his eye on his closest pursuers, went to a drive at the proper time.

Three Winners for Porter.

Jockey Porter earned his daily double astride Agrarian in the fifth event. The winner, second odds-on choice in a row to click, scored by four lengths to pay $2.60. Erebus barely held on to nose out Postscript for the place. Erebus, with his high turn of speed, drew into a wide early advantage. Porter had Agrarian on the rail and his mount caught and passed the pacemaker at the head of the stretch. He then galloped to the judges as if far the best.

Sky Haven administered a length and a half licking to the heavily played Chuck B. in the next to closing affair, thanks in some measure to Tipton's poor handling of the favorite. O'Neill was a scant head out of the place. The latter cut out most of the running, but stopped when the money was in sight. Sky Haven got to the front in the final drive and held on well. Chuck B., steered an in and out course, closed fast when it was too late.

Porter, who rode three winners Monday, again scored a triple when he brought the $4.10 favorite, Musing, first home by four lengths in the nightcap. Gibby's Choice finished a half length before Lone Hand for second money.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

The "cipher sonnet"—although it is not strictly a sonnet—given above was written by W. H. Bromage, Alameda, Calif. Deciphered, it reads:

"I sigh for you,
For one auto for two.
Oh, why are you icy, you tease?
I ought to be wise
For I see in your eyes
Envy and dollars and ease."

Although you will probably never see anyone drunk on pure water, strange as it seems, water is intoxicating. Water, taken to excess, produces an intoxication in man and animals which results in convulsions lasting up to 10 or 15 minutes. These strange facts were brought to light by Dr. Leonard G. Rowntree, Mayo scientist. Nature, he says, protects the individual against such water intoxication with ductless glands which control the thirst sensation.

After freeing his country from invaders, Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, longed to take part in a Crusade to free Jerusalem from non-believers. Sickness, however, kept him from this expedition—but before he died he asked Lord James Douglas to take his heart into battle in the Holy Land. After the king died, Douglas had his heart put in a casket and took it with him on a Crusade. Douglas was killed, but others returned Bruce's heart to Scotland.

Duke Five Host To Clemson Tonight

Blue Devils Open Home Season; Other Games for Week-End.

DURHAM, N. C., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Duke University's 1934 cagers will make their first home appearance and start their pretournament Southern Conferenct campaign by meeting Clemson in Duke gym tomorrow night.

In making their home bow, the Blue Devils will present their already well-known sophomore newcomer, Connie Mack, jr., 6 foot 5 center, who promises to be another of Duke's basket ball greats before he finishes his varsity career.

The other members of the Blue Devils' starting line-up are familiar to North Carolina cage fans. Jim Thompson, one of the greatest basketeers in the South, will be at his old forward berth after having spent last year at center. In 1932 Thompson was named as a forward on the All-Southern second team and last year he was voted All-Conference center.

Phil Weaver and Herb Thompson, who with Jim Thompson are co-captains of the 1934 quint, will be at their old guard posts. Sam Bell, junior from Charlotte, will occupy the forward berth pairing with Jim Thompson. The midget Bell is a flash on a cage floor.

The game with the Tigers of Clemson tomorrow night will be the opening salvo of a week-end of basket ball at Duke. Saturday night the Blue Devils meet Wake Forest in their opening Big Five game. Both varsity and freshman teams will see action that night, the frosh being slated to play at 7 o'clock with the varsity teams taking the floor at 8 o'clock.

Columbia Eleven Starts Trip Home

Hopes to Play Stanford U. Again, Says Little.

Pasadena, Calif., Jan. 3 (AP).—Coach Lou Little took his Columbia football team away from the scene of its Rose Bowl triumph late today with the words that he hoped the Lions could meet Stanford again sometime soon.

While the Lion mentor, whose team beat Stanford 7 to 0 New Year's Day, said no such game had been arranged, he expressed the personal opinion that the two grid squads might play again.

"I would like nothing better than to meet Stanford again, either during our regular schedule or in a post-season contest," he said. "There was a wonderful fine feeling between the two institutions both before and after the game.

"Of course there hasn't been any game arranged. Nothing definite can be done until the football committee, the director of athletics, and the university committee has acted upon it. Our regular schedule for the fall of 1934 has been completed."

St. John's Is Added To Basket Ball Loop

Annapolis, Jan. 3 (Spl.).—St. John's College has joined the Maryland Intercollegiate Basket Ball League, it was announced today upon resumption of activities following the holidays. The action, however, was taken too late for the Johnnies to figure in the league championship competition this year, Mount St. Mary's Colleges, league as neither Western Maryland nor members, is among the teams included in their schedule.

The local collegians resumed practice sessions this afternoon under Coach "Dutch" Lintz, in preparation for their opening game with Virginia Military Institute at Lexington on Saturday.

Hockey Owner Urges Shore Ban Be Lifted

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP).—Maj. Frederic McLaughlin, owner of the Chicago Blackhawks, today wired Managing Director Frank Patrick, of the National Hockey League, urging him to lift the suspension of Eddie Shore, star Boston player, so he could compete against the Blackhawks January 11.

Shore has been under an indefinite suspension since December 12, when he struck "Ace" Bailey, Toronto star, in that now famous battle. Maj. McLaughlin wired Director Patrick that inasmuch as Bailey was recovering and that the suspension of "Red" Horner, also involved in the battle, had been lifted that Shore should be allowed to compete again.

Chisox Sign Simmons To 2-Year Contract

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP).—Owner J. Louis Comiskey of the White Sox today announced that Al Simmons, star hitter and outfielder, had signed a two-year contract. No salary was mentioned, but it was estimated Al, who came to the White Sox last year from Philadelphia, would get $27,500 a season.

Comiskey said every important White Sox player had signed for 1934.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Tropical Park Race Track, Jan. 4.

Mike and I went into conference tonight to try to determine which of us is the jinx. After several hours of debate, we took a vote, which resulted in a tie. So I threw out Mike's vote and warned him that thar's alligators in then thar Everglades. So Mike left to haunt the stable boys' crap games, the paddock lunchroom and a few stalls in the hope of digging up a few good things. The Bennings person had two winners today. There is a shortage of horses here—at least older horses. Of the 450 racers hereabouts, more than 200 are of the new crop of 2-year-olds. And this track knows the public won't stand for more than one of those three-furlong puddle hops each day. BILL.

First race—Twidgets gets in this race with 100 pounds. Just who the apprentice rider will be, I'm not prepared to say. However, if he is a fair jockey, this one may get home. Drops 13 pounds off that last good effort. Polisher appears to be the one to cause the most trouble. Mr. Boss for the show.

Second race—Orilley probably will draw Meade in the saddle tomorrow. He has won two races and is as fit as hands can make him. I see on reason for mistakes. Premeditate is assigned only 100 pounds and is dangerous thus rigged. Zorana to take care of the others.

Third race—Dornoch appears to be the class of this field. The Charles Town star turned in a whale of an effort in his first start here and needs to improve only a little to lead this pack. Chain and Pat C. are the most serious contenders.

—Fourth race—The end of this purse seems to concern Forty Days and Solid American. Both have worked well. The former gets the edge, despite that disappointing race the other day. Playful Martha failed he here. Goes for third money in my book.

Fifth race—Frederick gets the Bennings' call in this sprint principally because of the weight assignments. The contest is bubbling over with speed. DeValera must tote 126 pounds, which is much weight for a none-too-courageous horse. The sleeper may be Bartering Kate, which gets in with 101.

Sixth race—Cabochon, one that I have warned you about, has only a steadying impost tomorrow and showed a game effort the other day. Had poor racing luck on that occasion. Clear sailing might make a difference. Escadron and Eurydice for the rest.

Seventh race—Fort Dearborn has worked well for this test and seems to be suitably placed. Trek is at home among these and is dangerous. War Banner was sharp up Charles Town way.

Quiet Chat Winner; Pays $47.20 for $2

Captain Joy Is 2d by Nose at Jefferson Park.

New Orleans, Jan. 3 (AP).—Quiet Chat, winner of only four races in 26 starts last year, scored at long odds today when he defeated a field of platers in a six-furlong dash at Jefferson park.

Running the distance in the slow time of 1:15 1-5, the 4-year-old son of Chatterton, carrying the silks of S. and N. Guarnie, finished the three-quarters of a mile a nose in front of Captain Joy with Flo M third.

With Flo M well backed in the mutuels and Captain Joy well liked, Quiet Chat paid the long odds of $47.20 for $2.

Ross, Former Sprinter, Now Tenor in Movies

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 3 (AP).—Lanny Ross, 27, formerly a National champion sprinter, was in Hollywood today prepared to launch a screen career as an acting tenor.

Ross, a native of Seattle, Wash., qualified for the American Olympics Team in 1928, but preferred touring Europe with the Yale Glee Club to minding his athletic laurels. The preference became a profession.

He is under contract to Paramount, where he will begin in films in the musical comedy, "Melody in Spring."

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NO SAINT, $4.60, $3, $2.50; SKIPPY McGEE, $2.80, $2.50; HILISE, $6.

NO SAINT, a fine-looking colt and a rapid breaker. He broke running, settled into his stride quickly, opened wide lead, ran straight and true and easily held race safe. SKIPPY McGEE broke well, but appeared to swerve in during the stretch run and Robertson had all he could do to keep him straight. He is sure to improve over this effort. HILISE got away fast, followed pace and was next best. GOLDEN DREAM closed gamely. ABNER a good-looking colt, but he had an outside post position and was carried wide on turn.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won all out; place, easily. Went to post at 2:33. Off at 2:34. Winner, Mrs. S. H. Fairbanks' b. g. (3), by General Lee—Tetrazzini. Trained by S. H. Fairbanks. Value to winner, $360; second, $75; third $50; fourth, $15. Time, 1:11 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MERVIN B, $8, $3.80, $2.60; BICKERING, $3.50, $3.10; KNIGHT'S HOPE, $5.90.

MERVIN B, a rapid beginner, was sent to the front with a rush, opened wide gap, saved ground, but tired and just lasted to win. BICKERING, slow to begin, worked his way up on the outside, closed with a rush in final furlong. He was wearing the winner down at finish. KNIGHT'S HOPE was hustled along all the way. BLIND RAFERTY was bothered considerably during the running and never had a chance to show his true form. HASTY BELLE, away poorly, made up much ground and tired at end.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start poor. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:02½. Off at 3:03. Winner, A. R. Silver's br. g. (3), by Durbar 2d—Sabotiere. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $360; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $15. Time 1:12 3-5.

Stocks Droop 1.1 Points in Dull Session

Some Losses Recovered as Turnover Reaches 1,390,940 Shares.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Stocks flurried downward this afternoon following a placid, featureless morning.

The speculative reaction in stocks, which came while the President was reading his mesage and while financial news tickers were featuring Gov. Lehman's utility recommendations to the New York Legislature, lasted barely a quarter of an hour and much of the ground lost was quickly recovered, the average net loss being approximately a point. Turnover was only 1,390,940 shares.

Wall street's perusal of President Roosevelt's statement to Congress tended to confirm previously heard intimations that the Executive would stick to a general discussion of affairs, the assumption being that specific recommendations would be made from time to time at later dates. Such, it was recalled, was the procedure followed during the special session of last year.

Views on Message.

Some thought the President, in his brief reference to foreign exchange rates, had implied that dollar stabilization was still regarded as impracticable at this time, leaving open the question of monetary policy.

Running through the message Wall street saw the thread of the New Deal philosophy and of the National planning goal which have been so strongly stressed during the past ten months.

Utility stocks weakened around the beginning of the fourth hour, when the market appeared to have gathered the impression that those issues might become targets for special legislation in this State. Although Gov. Lehman's recommendations were largely a reiteration of steps he had previously advocated, traders sold the light and power issues rather briskly for a few minutes and other groups softened with them until losses of fractions to more than 2 points were general through the market. By the close, however, comparatively few stocks were off more than a point.

On Losing List.

American Telephone, Consolidated Gas of New York and Public Service of New Jersey closed with losses of slightly over a point each. Du Pont, American Can, U. S. Steel, Harvester, Union Carbide, New York Central, Chrysler, General Motors, National Distillers and Bethlehem Steel were off major fractions to approximately 1½ net. United States Smelting, National Biscuit, General Electric, Westinghouse, Continental Can and Celanese were fairly steady to somewhat higher by closing time.

Although Wall Street's attention was primarily focused on the National Capital and the probable course of legislation at this session of the Federal Legislature, there was still room for business news. Steel production, Iron Age reported, has dipped to 31 per cent of capacity from the 37 per cent mark which the review estimated for last week at this time, the decline being the aftermath of December's unusually heavy specifications.

A clearer view of early first-quarter prospects will not be available until needs of the automobile industry are ascertained. The outlook for that business, said Iron Age, is "still clouded by difficulties in gearing up production for new models."

Christmas week brought the usual drop in power production and freight car loadings from the preceding week but made favorable comparisons with 1932, just as they had been doing since last spring.

Foreign Markets.

London, Jan. 3 (A.P.).—The stock exchange maintained its cheerful tone today. Kaffirs were in good demand on prospects of gold stocks from the advancing price of bar gold. Gilt-edged securities, industrials and oil shares attracted attention, while rubber shares eased on profit taking. Transatlantic issues moved uncertainly. The market closed steady.

Paris—Prices on the bourse were very irregular, especially international issues. Mining, oil and rubber shares were firm, while most French issues declined heavily following the announcement of a new loan. The closing was irregular.

Berlin—The tone of the boerse was firm with dye and electric shares being in demand. Due to profit taking closing prices were slightly below the best.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

President's Comments on the Reduction of Government Expenses and Currency Policy Seem Scarcely in Accord With the Facts.

By Ralph West Robey.

Perhaps everyone looked to the annual message of President Roosevelt for a clarification of those particular problems that he considers most important for the immediate welfare of the country. From my point of view this meant searching for, first, some indication of what the Administration plans to do in the way of putting the budget back in reasonable balance, and, secondly, some explanation of what is ahead of us in the way of currency policy. The President had little to say about either of these problems, but such as it was gave a favorable picture. I wish that it more closely fitted the facts.

On the question of the budget and Government credit the most pertinent statement was that "The credit of the Government has been fortified by drastic reduction in the cost of its permanent agencies through the economy act."

The Treasury daily statement for December 28 shows general expenditures in this fiscal year, aside from public-debt retirements, have been $1,434,000,000. In the same period last year the general expenditures were $1,717,000,000, a difference of less than $300,000,000.

Everyone knows, however, that the real situation is now shown completely by these aggregate figures. This is because there has been a wholesale shifting of items this year from general expenditures to emergency expenditures. Just how much such shifts amount to is an open question and the Treasury refuses to make the total public. If allowance is made for these, nevertheless, it is clear that the total for this year must be substantially increased. As a matter of fact, however, even if such shifts are overlooked and the present classification is accepted as complete, the saving is not great. Certainly, it scarcely justifies being characterized as a "drastic reduction."

On the question of monetary policy the President made two points. The first was that he introduced the gold and silver buying program as a means of "strengthening the whole financial structure," on the one hand, and to give us a "medium of exchange which will have over the years less variable purchasing and debt-paying power for our people than that of the past." The second point was that foreign nations "feel unable at this time to enter into stabilization discussions based on permanent and world-wide objectives."

President Does Not Explain How Policy Adds Strength.

Unfortunately, the President did not indicate how the purchase of gold and silver at an arbitrary price will strengthen our financial structure. One can only surmise, therefore, that what he has in mind is that this result is to be attained through the additional amount of metal which the policy will put back of our monetary system.

We have in this country $4,323,000,000 of actual gold—a larger supply than any other nation has ever had. The gold policy has added perhaps as much as $75,000,000 in two months—an utterly insignificant amount as compared with the total. It may be noted parenthetically, too, that the original purpose of the policy as announced by the President was as an "effective means" for raising prices.

Insofar as the comments on stabilization are concerned, it seems to me that there is little that needs to be said. Last summer, certainly, other nations not only wanted some kind of a stabilization agreement but virtually demanded it. At the time, it will be recalled, the President repeatedly made it clear that he would not consider stabilization.

It perhaps is true that at present foreign nations refuse to talk stabilization with us. I can not help but wonder, however, whether this is so much the result of their "internal and other conditions" as it is because of the plans being followed by our own Government.

Dried Fruits Steady.

New York, Jan. 3 (A.P.).—DRIED FRUITS—Market, steady, unchanged.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 75.2 Level

Foreign Obligations Firm; Sales Turnover Rises to $12,191,000.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Strength of foreign obligations, led by the German group, proved today's feature in an otherwise mixed and rather hesitant bond market.

The trading volume expanded to $12,191,000, par value, which was around the normal aggregate. The average for 60 domestic corporate issues, however, was unchanged.

Advances of 2 to around 7 points predominated in the German list.

Credit for Rally.

The two-day rally in this division was attributed principally to the fact that Washington had protested to the Reich against further reduction of cash interest payments on German dollar bonds. German government, state, municipal and corporation maturities participated in the broad recovery.

Elsewhere in the foreign section rallies of 1 to 3 or more points were registered by loans of Australia, Brisbane City, Cuba, Finland, France, Japan and Poland.

United States Government securities, although only moderately active, moved up one thirty-second to as much as nineteen thirty-seconds of a point, with the best gains being found in the Treasury Department.

Rail Changes Narrow.

Prices of most rails, utilities and industrials were inclined to follow a narrow range as traders and investors attempted to interpret the President's message to Congress from the standpoint of the listed loans market.

Improvement was shown by some issues of American Telephone, American I. G. Chemical, Burlington, Detroit Edison, Dold Packing, Houston Oil, Louisville & Nashville, International Telephone, Lehigh Valley Coal, National Steel, Studebaker, Texas Corporation, United Drug and Youngstown Sheet & Tube.

A number of recently active loans sagged with stocks, although casualties here were not too severe. Losers of fractions to around a point or more included bonds of American & Foreign Power, American Rolling Mill, Armour & Co., Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, Denver & Rio Grande, Erie, Great Northern, Illinois Central, National Dairy, Philadelphia Co., Postal Telegraph, Frisco, and Western Electric.

Early Cotton Gains Cut in Late Trading

January Closes at 10.24 as Market Was Unchanged to 4 Points Lower.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Early advances which carried cotton into new high ground for the movement during today's early trading met considerable realizing, and the selling became more active following the sharp decline in the market after the publication of the President's message. March contracts, which had advanced to 10.57 during the earlier trading, broke to 10.38 and closed at 10.42, with the general market closing steady, net unchanged to 4 points lower.

Demand from foreign and domestic trade sources was accompanied by reports of a better demand for spot cotton from domestic mills. On the early buying the market advanced 14 to 17 points, but cotton come out at these prices and the general list showed sharp reactions.

The market was steadied by covering or trade buying at the decline and closing quotations were 2 or 3 points up from the lowest on most positions.

According to comment here cotton traders found no fresh incentives in the President's message.

Exports today 18,007 making 4,218,408 so far this season. Port receipts 34,543. U. S. port stocks 4,111,693.

Export Trade In Argentine Is At Low Level

Argentina's export trade during the eleven months ended November, 1933, was substantially lower than during the corresponding period of 1932, according to a report from Consul John W. Bailey, jr., made public by the Commerce Department.

Total exports in the 1933 period amounted to 12,571,000 tons, valued at 440,998,000 gold pesos, compared with 14,916,000 tons, valued at 532,490,000 gold pesos in the January-November period of 1932.

The decrease of approximately 16 per cent in quantity and 17 per cent in value, for the eleven months of 1933 as compared with the preceding year, is more than accounted for by the decrease in grain and linseed shipments, which declined by 2,573,000 tons and 96,034,000 gold pesos in value. Meat exports during 1933 were slightly below the level of 1932, while shipments of cattle hides, wool and quebracho registered improvement in the 1933 period.

Argentine export trade during November, the report points out, continued at practically the same low level recorded for the months of September and October. As compared with November, 1932, exports for November of this year showed a decline of approximately 15 per cent in quantity and 30 per cent in value.

Farm Tool Exports Rise In November

Exports of agricultural implements from the United States during November reached a value of $1,024,845, compared with $1,007,724 for October and $656,053 for November, 1932, according to figures compiled in the Commerce Department's Machinery and Agricultural Implements Division.

More than half the total exports for the month consisted of tractors and parts, the value of which reached the figure of $546,684, compared with $359,151 for November, 1932. Shipments of wheel tractors declined, being valued at $101,015, compared with $121,816 in November, 1932, but exports of track-laying tractors showed a large increase, the November, 1933, figure being $238,523, compared with $73,390 in November, 1932. Likewise, parts and accessories recorded a gain, shipments during November reaching the total of $203,815, compared with $79,390 for November, 1932.

Although shipments were light, increases over November last year were noted throughout the entire list, with the exceptions of tractors, noted above, sprayers and dusters, drills and seeders and feed grinders. Large gains were made in exports of cream separators, lawn mowers, threshers and windmills.

Exports for the 11 months ended November were valued at $10,765,420, a gain of 9 per cent over the $9,745,128 exported in the corresponding period of 1932.

Sweden Has Sweet Tooth.

Stockholm, Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Sweden's sweet tooth has doubled its consumption since 1913, an inquiry by the Finance Department has shown. A proposed tax on candy would bring in ten million kronor, but so far the authorities hesitate. In 1931 the 6,000,000 Swedes consumed 12,403 tons of candy, mostly chocolates, worth 22,582,000 kronor. Over 80 per cent of the candy makers are women.

Daily Oil Yield Decreased by 150,050 Units

U. S. Petroleum Output of Week Is Reduced to 2,139,850 Barrels.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Daily average gross crude oil production in the United States decreased 150,050 barrels in the week ended December 30, totaling 2,139,850 barrels, the American Petroleum Institute reported today.

Daily average production east of California decreased 118,550 barrels, to 1,693,450 barrels.

Imports of crude and refined oils at principal United States ports totaled 991,000 barrels against 1,068,000 barrels.

Because of the delay in receiving reports from companies in connection with the weekly refinery statistics, caused by the New Year holiday, that section of the report was omitted.

Sweden Stops Imports Of Some Foodstuffs

Following the recommendation of the official grain commission, a Swedish government decree, effective December 23, 1933, prohibits the importation of oats, corn, and most animal feeding stuffs, pending the adoption of definite regulations for taxing such imports and compulsory mixing with domestically produced grains, according to a cablegram received in the Department of Commerce from Commercial Attache T. O. Klath, Stockholm.

It is understood that the purpose of the measure is to increase the consumption of domestic grains for feeding purposes, and to reduce the government's large grain surplus accumulated under existing purchases and price guarantee regulations.

Taxing Tangle In W. Virginia Still Unsolved

Legislature Resumes Hunt for Levy Means After Court Damper.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.). After a week's recess, during which the supreme court voided its taxing legislation enacted prior to the holidays, the West Virginia Legislature resumed its session today still in a quandary over the tax problem and without any definite plan for its solution.

A joint committee considered the problem all morning, but failed to get anywhere. Speaker Ralph M. Hiner said afterward:

"We will try to do something, but right now the committee has nothing to report to the Legislature. We are going to call in some more lawyers. We also would like the help of anybody who thinks he has an idea."

Three plans for putting the State tax-limiting amendment to the constitution to work and permitting the collection of $25,000,000 of property taxes were considered, but no agreement was reached.

One Favors Resubmission.

One was a rehearing in the supreme court of the decision that voided the recent tax-collection bill. The other provided for an allotment of 30 per cent of direct levies for debt services and the remainder for general county and school purposes.

The third was a provision that debts be paid from maximum levies first and the remainder for school and governmental purposes, requiring additional revenue from indirect State taxes.

A bill was approved by the House authorizing Clarksburg to transfer funds from its playgrounds, band, health and library funds to its general funds.

Ouster Right Asked.

A resolution by Delegate Davis (Democrat), Cabell, directs county school superintendents to remove members of county school boards unwilling to cooperate in the tax crisis.

Delegate Butcher (Democrat), Wood, offered a substitute liquor repeal amendment without provision for regulation, leaving that to the legislature without inhibition. A pending substitute provides for State liquor monopoly.

Schools Kept Closed.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Boards of education in three counties in West Virginia have extended the Christmas school holidays for two weeks, pending a solution of the tangled tax situation.

Schools in the city of Charleston and Kanawha County, affecting 30,000 children, will remain closed until at least January 15, because there is no money available for their operation and no taxes can be anticipated, the latest attempt of the Legislature to evolve tax collecting machinery being thrown out by the Supreme Court.

Lincoln and McDowell Counties also extended the holiday period. The Wyoming County Board announced schools will reopen Monday with teachers "taking a chance" on getting paid.

Radio Waves and Ripples

DISGUISED by a magical blue card as an executive of the Columbia Broadcasting System, we were passed through the Speaker's lobby to the floor of the House for the opening of Congress yesterday. We were inclined to feel a trifle proud of our vicarious importance until it was found that a lot of people, disguised as one thing or another, had managed to get by the guards ahead of us and were treading on our toes and blocking our view of the President.

We spent so much time seeking to improve our position that we didn't hear much of what Mr. Roosevelt said. There was, however, Mrs. Roosevelt, sitting solemn and immobile in the Speaker's box. And there were the news cameramen closely following scripts of the President's address, turning on their equipment when he reached passages they deemed impressive.

WRC's Monday Revue, the show the minds spent no end of time and effort in rebuilding several weeks ago, going so far as to ring in Mrs. Pennyfeather, of N. B. C. Cuckoo fame, goes off the air Monday. Explanation offered is that the sponsors got tired of spending money, which is about as good as explanations are running these days. Into the 8 to 8:30 p. m. spot it vacates, the minds are moving "Pageant of Melody," a local commercial that has been playing the Sunday airwaves with Marguerite Cromwell, Ed Steffe, Lucille Pierce Ferguson, George Bond and Jack Minnevitch.

Will Rogers, this department's favorite funny man, succeeds George M. Cohan on N. B. C. Sunday night broadcasts with the Revelers Quartet and Emil Coleman and his orchestra. With Bill back on the air and the Congressional Record to read, we feel like canceling our subscription to the New Yorker.

During the next week or so Columbia puts three or four new shows on the air that you may want to hear.

Then there's the Playboys, harmony and comedy team, getting into their first commercial Sunday-a-week, and something in the nature of those soap and mouth wash ads called "Charm Secrets," starting next week for Tuesday and Thursday broadcasting at 11:15 a. m.

Society Flocks To Buy Relics

McCormick Riches Sold at Auction; Daughter Buys Silver.

New York, Jan. 3 ((AP)).—A fur-coated audience, with lorgnettes and lapdogs, crowded the auction rooms yesterday where belongings of Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick were going under the hammer.

Among them were Mrs. McCormick's daughter, Muriel, now Mrs. Elisha Dyer Hubbard, who bought up most of her mother's table silver, and Mrs. McCormick's sister, Mrs. Parmelee Prentice, who bought nothing.

Elaborate procelains, gilded silver finger bowls, goldplated dessert plates, and other luxuries of the red-plush era were brought, one by one, to a red velvet stage, and the eager Park Avenue crowd snapped them up.

One of the dealers present flounced out early in the sale, muttering, "you can't make any money here. Too much family." The total of the day's sales was $23,372.

Decorating the walls of the auction room were the lace-trimmed bed sheets which will be auctioned off later in the week.

Snickers came from spectators at one piece put up for sale, a huge porcelain punch bowl with fittings for electric lights. It was too Victorian for the taste of today, but someone bought it for $60.

David Warfield, the actor, paid $100 for a gilded silver soup tureen.

Others in the crowd included Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, who looked on, but did not buy; Mrs. Walter Chrysler and Walter Chrysler, jr., Mrs. William Douglas, Mrs. Charles Whiting, Mrs. J. J. Carlisle and Mrs. A. V. Stout.

Colored Woman Freed, But White Child Is Held

Detroit, Jan. 3 (AP).—Betty Holland, colored, who had been held since December 20 on a charge of suspicion of kidnaping because a white baby boy was found in her possession, was released today.

Police said that a Buffalo (N. Y.) woman had informed them she was the child's mother and that she had given him to Miss Holland. Police matrons said the baby boy would be sent to a charitable society for adoption.

Mrs. Braden is survived by another son, B. E. Braden, of Lynchburg, and two daughters, Mrs. L. A. Andrews, Lynchburg, and Mrs. H. W. Campbell, New York.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-Mark Applied For)

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

REPEAL of the pay cut as a step toward National recovery was urged last night in a radio address by E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes.

BAKER.

Representative Tom Blanton's recent offer to fill all the jobs of Federal employes who would quit from his own district was vigorously attacked by the labor leader. Mr. Babcock called the Texan's offer an "auction" of jobs that is conducive to starvation wages.

In answer to "What is a reasonable standard of salaries for Government employes?" he declared:

"The Government must purchase the best available service. It must pay the salaries which will attract those able to give the best service. In short, the Government career must be not only honorable, it must be desired by the best citizens. * * * Cheap labor is poor labor, and it gives poor service."

Three Civil Service Commission employes have been transferred to other departments, the commission announced yesterday. Mrs. Eunice B. Arnold, Fourth District, is now with Agriculture. Miss Elizabeth Downing (*), special disbursing agent, and Miss Una H. Keck, deputy disbursing agent, are now with Division of Disbursement, Treasury.

IDENTIFICATION of firearms and documents, important in solution of many crimes, was the general subject of an illustrated lecture by Dr. Wilmer Souder, Bureau of Standards, recently at the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill, N. C.

SOUDER.

In the firearms part of the lecture, Dr. Souder explained the historical developments of identification, interior and exterior of ballistics, pistol and revolver types, lands and grooves, the comparison microscope, obtaining of fatal bullets and test bullets, preservation and presentation of evidence, firing pins and shells and tests for experts.

On document identification he pointed out features in mechanical phases of typewriters, makes of typewriters, and individual machines. He questioned character from handwriting and spoke on systems of identification involving divergence from systems, disguise, and age of ink.

When Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, counted noses at the National Museum, he found 348,012 new specimens had been added during 1932. He also found that more than 1,300 animals were added to the population at National Zoological Park. Deaths, exchanges and loans took 1,000 away. As the old year rolled out there were 2,496 animals at the Zoo, Dr. Abbot said.

Walt Mason, Himself

Glad Rags.

The prudent man is spick and span, his necktie's bright and green, his pants are pressed and on his vest no eggstains may be seen. His hat is fine and bootblacks shine his footgear thrice a week; he grooms his head, no whiskers red disfigure chin or cheek. He may be broke, his watch in soak, meal ticket on the blink, but still he tries to wear good ties and shirts of dazzling pink. Then men will say, "That gilt-edged jay is surely in the swim; when we propose to buy some hose, we'll buy the same from him." And so he wends among his friends and sells them Belgian hares and heating stoves and orange groves and bonds and stocks and shares. He sells them pens and Leghorn hens and eggs and rusty nails, and dachshund pups and buttercups and fresh and salted whales. Full soon his feet in Easy street are treading to and fro, he has supplies of custard pies and 40 kinds of dough. The luckless hick who isn't spick, who isn't even span, can't find a clew to jobs to do, he is an also ran. In seedy rags he walks the flags, his grief he likes to tell, and none will buy from such a guy, if he has things to sell.

Chicago Plans to Link "L" and Trolley Cars

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP).—Plans for unification of the Chicago elevated lines and the street car system by revamping the capital stock of both was presented to Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson today by Attorney Walter L. Fisher, court coordinator in the negotiations.

Fisher said a majority of the security holders of both concerns had agreed to the plan, which contemplates exchange of present outstanding securities for securities in a new traction company.

Martini Thrills to New York Ovation of Which He Was Deprived in This City

Was Booked to Sing Here But Did Not Do So

Triumph Awaiting Him Realized at the Met; About Showshops.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

Between Christmas and New Year's, a day or two before Marion Talley signalized the resumption of her operatic career by a triumphant New Year's Eve performance with the Chicago Grand Opera Company, a nervous young Italian shifted from one foot to the other on the stage of the glamorous old Metropolitan Opera House in New York, so redolent of distinguished operatic tradition, while waves of applause pitched about him like breakers on a high sea.

Women tossed him their corsages from the famous "golden horseshoe." Awkwardly he bent over and picked them up, his face agleam, his lips quivering in the excitement of a thrill that veritably comes only once in a lifetime.

The youth was Nino Martini.

The Martini debut long had been heralded. The house was packed, even if the performance was a benefit at $7.50 a seat for the orchestra stalls. There were standees to capacity all around the rail.

Sang Verdi's Duke.

In his Metropolitan Opera debut, Martini sang the role of the Duke in Verdi's "Rigoletto," tragedy of love and fickleness. Lily Pons, in her first appearance of the season, was Gilda. In the title role was the venerable Giuseppe de Luca, long one of the Metropolitan's favorite barytones.

Martini's nervousness—he had had no full rehearsal, but only with piano—militated against his chances in the first act. Calmness and self-assurance, however, came with the second act, when he swept through his love scenes with Gilda. He was on firm ground in the last act with the great tenor aria—one of Caruso's greatest—"Donna e Mobile," the prelude to the quartet. His was no less a personal triumph because Pons and de Luca shared it equally.

Might Have Happened Here.

Now then, this intrusion upon precincts ordinarily presided over with distinction by Mr. Ray Brown, of The Post's Music Department, is dared in this somewhat less chromatic column only because Nino Martini's tremendous success in his Metropolitan debut put into accomplishment no more than what was anticipated by a considerable body of his admirers in Washington only a few short months ago.

It will be recalled by many that on a Sunday night, in the Belasco Theater, Maestro Alfredo Salmaggi, immediately prior to going on to such an overwhelmingly profitable season of popular-priced grand opera in the New York Hippodrome, announced Nino Martini as the star of a single performance at which, unfortunately for all concerned, Mr. Martini did not appear.

Absence in Doubt.

So secretive was the management on that disappointing Sabbath evening that it was even a little difficult to determine for a surety whether Mr. Martini had appeared or not. Both parties to the controversy subsequently made it plain that he had not.

If he had, the presumption is that his ovation at the hands of a large house of enthusiastic well-wishers would have been no less thunderous than the one he enjoyed in late December in the Metropolitan.

This was one of those rare events in the theater which the Capital missed by the proverbial eyelash.

Now if the Metropolitan should decide ever to come here again——

One learns with some surprise, but upon seemingly excellent authority, that that sloe-eyed and languorous young screen delineator of everything from lazy lovers to lethal lawbreakers, Mr. George Raft, has a brother playing in Washington this week, although making no attempt to capitalize his distinguished relationship to one of the modern cinema's pseudo-Valentinos. It is being bruited about among the cognoscenti—if any—that the Mr. Lou Leroy lending his talents to the enlivenment of "Greetings of 1934," the burlesque attraction currently regaling the customers of the Chesterfieldian Mr. Jimmy Lake's Gayety Theater, is none other than a full brother of George Raft, noted for his work in "Night After Night," "Scarface" and other magic lantern shows of homicide and cunning.. Did you ever!

That Funny Vice President Again!

Old Alexander Throttlebottom himself, as impersonated with droll and contagious humor by Victor Moore, this year finds himself slightly humiliated as a sandwich-man, celebrating the superiorities of President Wintergreen's "Maryblue Shirts." This, of course, would all take place in "Let 'Em Eat Cake," the sequel to last season's record-breaking "Of Thee I Sing," coming to the National next week.

A Rift in Offing.

Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, George K. Arthur and Karl Dane, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, "Slim" Summerville and Eddie Gribbon, ZaSu Pitts and Thelma Todd—any number of famous comedy teams have been split up after a brief period of joint usefulness. There is nothing new in that, or at variance with sound business practice.

When a major comic and his little band of hand-picked stooges stand on the verge of separation, however, that at once becomes news—especially when the major comic is practically the man who invented "stooges" and his stooges are the originals whom he made famous in a nameless, indecisive sort of way.

This debacle of ruptured comedy relationships is what is about to befall Ted Healy and his stooges, celebrated as among the most sublime nuts of stage or screen!

No Longer a Unit.

In "Fugitive Lovers," formerly known, if memory serves, as "Transcontinental Bus," coming to the screen at Loew's Fox Theater on Friday, Ted Healy and his stooges appear in support of Robert Montgomery and Madge Evans, although their contributions to the movement of the pictured narrative are not concerted, as has invariably heretofore been the case.

For the first time since they began their adventures before the cameras and microphones Mr. Healy and his assisting gentlemen do not appear or act as a quartet intent upon preserving the reputation of a comic unit. Mr. Healy is cast as an amiable young inebriate, while his daily associates are seen as a trio of itinerant vaudevillians. Healy goes his way and the stooges go theirs.

We Shed No Tear.

Following this partial separation in "Fugitive Lovers," word comes from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, Healy and his stooges will be completely divorced for the first time since their advent in pictures. Moe Howard has been assigned a role by himself, without even his fellow-stooges, let alone Major Domo Healy, in "Reformia," a comedy of prison life.

"Reformia" is a short subject dealing with "Paradise Penitentiary," a delightful institution, in which the inmates lead so ideal an existence that they are utterly desolated when their terms expire and they are forced to depart.

Somehow this is a degree of remorse we are not able to summon at the word that Mr. Healy and his stooges are approaching the parting of the ways. As far as we are personally concerned, this may be—and probably is—all for the best!

As was to have been expected in view of its last-season predecessor's record week, bales of mail orders are being received on every delivery of the weary postman at the National Theater for next week's engagement of "Let 'em Eat Cake," the sequel to "Of Thee I Sing," winner of the Pulitzer Prize. "Of Thee I Sing" played to $36,000 during its Washington week and hardly less is expected of its sequel, in which the same trio of stars are to be seen—William Gaxton, Lois Moran and Victor Moore. Only three cities are to be visited by the new George S. Kaufman-Morris Ryskind collaboration on its way from New York to Chicago. They are Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia. The box-office sale at the National will open tomorrow morning.

Throttlebottom's Background.

Speaking of "Let 'em Eat Cake," as a great many people will be, if they are not already—what with Congress being in session and all—it should be known that that august personage, Vice President Throttlebottom, owes his enormous gusto and probable immortality to Victor Moore, one of the most reliable comedians the American theater has known these past 30 years or so.

Victor Moore is a Vermonter who lived in New Jersey as a boy. In his early days on the stage he played every conceivable sort of part, one being a servant with two lines in the late John Drew's original production of "Rosemary," in which Maude Adams was leading woman.

Star of Vaudeville.

Before becoming a Broadway favorite in George M. Cohan's "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," he had established himself with his wife, Emma Littlefield, as a vaudeville headliner in a bit of madwaggery known from coast to coast as "Change Your Act, or Back to the Woods." This turn was a regular annual visitor to Chase's and later Keith's.

His more recent roles in musical comedy have been in "Oh Kay," "Funny Face," "Heads Up," "Hold Everything" and "Princess Charming." He created the role of the downtrodden Alexander Throttlebottom in "Of Thee I Sing" and has become identified in an extraordinary way, particularly in the National Capital, with that condidate for lasting fame in the theater's gallery of memorable character creations.

Oddities, curiosities; strange people, queer things—these will be offered in abundance beginning at 1 o'clock this afternoon when the "Odditorium" exhibit from the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago is thrown open for the wonderment of local thrill-seekers. The exhibition arrived last night from Boston and will be presented on a series of specially built stages and in a succession of glass cases for the items of inanimate wonder. The collection has been gathered from all parts of the world. Performances will be continuous from 1 p. m., throughout the afternoon and evening at the Washington Auditorium.

"No Such Animal" Note.

Now if the "Odditorium" could only boast an occupant of the theater seat behind you who didn't kick the back of your chair, rattle bundles, cough down the back of your neck, keep up a running barrage of conversation with her next neighbor or chew gum incessantly, it would really have something worth looking at!

You don't run across many Dodo birds or dinosauri these days either!
